

Photo finish

Owl to promote book

Can owls turn their heads completely around? Does the hoot of an owl indicate impending disaster? Can owls fly without making a sound?

These questions and more will be answered at Coles bookstore in the Georgetown Marketplace on Saturday, Nov. 18 at 4 p.m. Mountsberg Wildlife Centre will bring a wild owl to the store to help promote Conservation Halton's photography book, Halton: Rising, Wild and Beckoning.

Already this book has sold 9,000 copies and raised more than $200,000 for conservation. The book was published by Conservation Halton Foundation, a volunteer group raising funds for the renovation and expansion of the visitor centre at Mountsberg.

The coffee table book which sells for $39.95 includes a separate fold-out guide map with scenic driving tours and all the parks and conservation lands in the Halton watershed.
