Liberals win majority

Halton incumbent Liberal MP Julian Reed receives a congratulatory kiss from his wife Deanna after results showed he easily won the riding Monday night and will head to Ottawa for a third straight term. The results in Halton were part of a red tide that swept through the province.

Julian Reed coasts to easy win in Halton

The Liberal red tide steam-rolled its way to another majority government Monday night, and Julian Reed went along for the ride.

The actor turned politician pulled off the three-peat—much like party leader Jean Chrétien—once again winning the lion's share of votes in Halton and remaining firmly entrenched as the riding's MP.

While early results strongly suggested a convincing victory, the 64-year-old Norval resident kept his emotions well guarded until local NDP flag-bearer Brenda Dolling dropped by his Main Street (Milton) campaign office to offer congratulations.

At that point it was nearing 11 p.m. and both media and supporters were becoming anxious for Reed to recognize his win.

So, in keeping with past days spent on stage and screen, he gave the audience what they wanted.

"This is very satisfying. The people of Halton have been very good to me, I just hope I can live up to their expectations," said Reed, who took all but one of the first two dozen polls showing and won many by more than twice that of the Alliance Party's Tim Dobson and Progressive Conservative Tom Kilmer.
