

Spic and span

Kim McKenzie took advantage of the warm spring weather last week as he and a friend enjoyed a quiet paddle down the Credit River, starting at Inglewood, before pulling his canoe out at the Glen Williams bridge. During the three-hour trip, which included lunch on the river, they saw lots of wildlife, including three deer.

Police nab man wanted for attempted murder

Halton Regional Police got more than they bargained for when they stopped a driver for speeding Tuesday morning.

About 7:20 a.m., police were running radar on Guelph St. at Sinclair Ave. as part of Project Gateway. After pulling over the driver, and running a check on him, police found there was an outstanding warrant for the arrest of the man for attempt murder and use of a firearm.

The man, Hoy Dong Tran, 26, of Toronto has been charged in connection with a shooting at an Ossington Ave. Toronto karaoke bar earlier this year.

Halton officers apprehended the man without incident and turned him over to Metro Police.

Halton super earns honour

Halton superintendent has been honoured as Ontario's top education administrator.

A surprised Brenda Kearney was named the winner at last week's Halton District School Board meeting.

"Who knew about this?" said the special education superintendent after the award was announced by a Niagara University professor.

Dr. Frank Calzi, co-ordinator of the American university's education administration program, said there was strong backing for Kearney, who was endorsed by several persons.

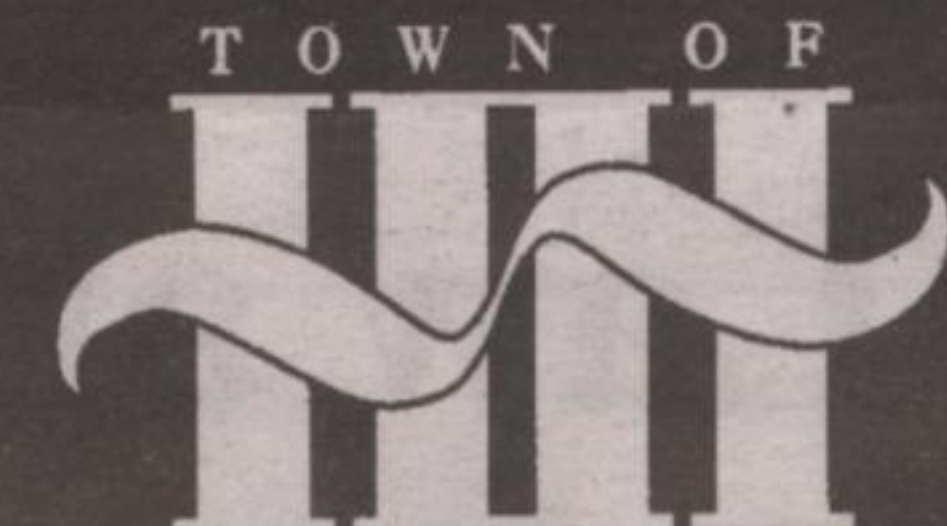

"We've never received such passionate letters of support for a candidate," he said.

There are several criteria for the award, which recognizes outstanding achievement by a school administrator:

- Community involvement
- A highly intellectual approach to promoting solutions
- Compassion and hunger to help and support all students, teachers and staff.

"This is indeed an honour for the board and it's most deserving," noted Halton Hills Trustee and board chair Ethel Gardiner.

Under the awards program, an outstanding education administrator is chosen for both Ontario and western New York.
