Anne Rogers Chamber director knows her business

Just call Anne Rogers the voice of business in Halton Hills.

As the executive director of the Halton Hills Chamber of Commerce for the past six years, Rogers manages the association's office at 170 Guelph St., is secretary to its board of directors, and works to spread the chamber's vision of a healthy united business community throughout the town and the province.

"I love the diversity," says Rogers about her job.

She enjoys the variety of people that she meets and the work that she does. Her job description includes providing educational and health services to the association's 450 members, running the visitor information centre, and working with various levels of government to support economic growth here.

When not working hard for the chamber, Rogers focuses her "spare time" on volunteering.

She serves with many volunteer groups now and in the past, such as the Royal Canadian Legion, the United Way, Cancer Society and Easter Seals.

"I believe strongly in supporting the needs of the community," says the 31-year resident of Halton Hills.

Doug Bryant A helping hand at the hospital

A familiar face to many who visit the Georgetown hospital campus of the William Osler Health Centre is volunteer Doug Bryant.

The Georgetown man has been a volunteer with the Georgetown Hospital Volunteer Association for about 10 years, working in the pharmacy for a couple hours a day every week and co-ordinating the information desk Friday mornings.

"It's some way I can help in the community that I live in," says Bryant.

When he had retired 10 years ago, he thought that maybe he would drive for the Red Cross or the Cancer Society, but having a heart problem he was reluctant to deal with road stress. Someone suggested the hospital needed volunteers and he and his wife Barbara signed on. It was a perfect match, says Bryant.

Before he retired, he worked in sales and purchasing, and says he missed the contact with people. At the hospital he enjoys helping people who seek the help of the volunteers at the information desk such as assisting people in wheelchairs in and out of the hospital. The desk also relieves the hospital switchboard of many information-related calls.
