Plant a gourmet garden

Gourmet gardens make their alluring call to all the senses. The nose becomes intoxicated with the smell of sweet peppers and Italian tomatoes. The tongue is seduced with the flavor of fine herbs in slowly simmered dishes. The eye is enticed by the colorful union of flowers, foliage and fruit. The kitchen garden is yours to reinvent.

Some gardeners plant flowers in among their vegetables to ward off insect pests, but the flowers in the gourmet garden also beckon the taste buds. Forget about orderly lines of vegetables marching to attention. Edible flowers and plants jostle together in a harmonious mix with vegetables to the delight of the nose, the eyes and the palate!

The gourmet garden can make its home in the smallest corner: even a tiny balcony is room enough to pamper a few aromatic herbs and a vegetable or two, sun-ripened and luscious. A planter on a windowsill will turn out a crop of lettuce and baby carrots or fill your kitchen with the inviting aroma of basil and parsley.
