Pair unhurt as train derails

No one was injured when a Canadian National (CN) train derailed just before it crossed the bridge over the Credit River in Georgetown late Friday night.

Eleven of the train's 56 cars—empty hopper cars, box cars and bulk head flats used for carrying lumber—left the tracks around 11 p.m. Friday. The train was eastbound from Battle Creek, Michigan bound for Concord, Ont.

There were only two people aboard the 35,044-foot train, a conductor and an engineer.

Ian Thomson, director of communications for CN, said the cause of the derailment was still under investigation.

Dozens of people watched the cleanup effort from Armstrong Avenue Saturday. Thomson said Saturday afternoon that the rail line was expected to be cleared and operational by the end of the day.
