

Life-saving tips for your family

October is Fire Safety Month so here are what specialists in fire prevention products had to say about optimum protection in your home. Consider discussing this Kidde Safety list with each member of your family, or pin it on the fridge, or memorize it for swift action in the event of sudden fire:

1. Insist on having at least one working, smoke alarm on every floor (including the basement) and test them monthly.
2. Never remove batteries from smoke alarms for any reason other than replacing them.
3. Practice an escape plan at least once a year. Make sure the whole family is involved.
4. Plan two ways out of every room.

On the second floor, keep a light-weight, tangle-free ladder designed to grip a window frame.

5. Practice crawling low to the ground keeping your mouth covered, which you must do in an actual emergency situation.
6. Plan a pre-arranged meeting place outside your home.
7. Call 911 from a neighbour's house.
8. Once outside, stay outside. Tell firefighters if someone is trapped inside.

Fire-smart families do the drill

Fire can break out in your home instantaneously, experts warn. But an effort to prepare the family for such an emergency will reduce confusion and improve everyone's chance of survival.

"Are you are a fire-smart family?" asks Carol Heller, vice president, residential products for Kidde Safety, a leading producer of residential fire protection equipment. You are if you can answer 'yes' to the following:

- Every level of our home is equipped with a working smoke alarm.

- We test our smoke alarm once a month.
- We replace the batteries in our smoke alarm every year.
- Our family has developed and is familiar with our escape plan.
- Everyone in our family, no matter what the age, knows how to dial 911 in an emergency.

- We have at least one fire extinguisher in our home (kitchen, garage, bedroom, etc.) and everyone knows how to use it.

These issues and many others are important to deal with before an incident occurs.
