NEW HOPE FOR LOWER DENTURES

Do you have trouble with your lower dentures? Does it move from side to side, or fly out of your mouth when you cough or sneeze? Do you have a flat lower ridge? Have you always had trouble wearing it for long periods? If you have answered YES to any of these questions, you might want to look into the "MYOLOC WING SYSTEM".

The Myoloc System is still relatively new. It consists of varying sizes of specially designed "Wings" that attached to your lower denture. They are small wing like loop inserts, that are placed on the inside flange of the denture, where your tongue rests. It is completely unnoticeable in the mouth, as it is covered by the tongue. The tongue actually helps hold the denture in place as it rests on the wings.

This system can be inserted in new dentures, or can also be placed in existing dentures, in the same length of time as it takes to do a simple repair. The cost of the insert is about the same as a standard relin.

Thousands of people across the country are already wearing dentures with the Myoloc Wing System. These people report greatly increased comfort, when compared to dentures without the insert. If you are interested in seeing a sample of the Myoloc Wings or if you have any questions, don't hesitate to contact our office. We offer no charge consultations.

You do not need a referral - simply call our office direct.

Creating confident smiles since 1982!

Teachers and school board reach deal

A marathon mediation session has resulted in a tentative agreement between the Halton District School Board and its elementary teachers.

Negotiators for both parties worked from 10:30 a.m. Monday until 4:30 a.m. Tuesday to reach the settlement.

Halton is the last public elementary teachers union in the province without a contract.

The president of the Halton chapter of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario would not reveal many details of the collective agreement as the pact still has to be ratified by teachers and the school board. Maureen Weinberger did say though that it is a two-year retroactive deal that would run from Sept. 1, 2002 to Aug. 31, 2004.

"We'll be starting it (negotiating) all over again soon," she said. "It's mandated that all collective agreements around the province come due in 2004," she noted.

A teachers' meeting to ratify the deal has not been set. Weinberger expects it to be held no later than next Wednesday, the day school board trustees are expected to vote on the settlement. Weinberger noted union sanctions such as teachers not attending staff meetings will remain in place until a deal is ratified.

The chief negotiator for the Halton public board characterized the latest mediation session between the two sides as long, but fruitful.

"I think we both were tired. It was a long haul but it was worth it," said Dawn

Beckett-Morton. "I think we're pleased. The bottom line is you never get everything you hope to achieve ... but I think we made our best effort and the union did, too."

Weinberger described contract negotiations generally as "a tough process. You do the best you can for as many people as you can." She said there was never really any point during the extended meeting Monday and Tuesday where the talks appeared ready to break off.

As for the prime areas of concern that are addressed in the tentative deal, Weinberger said the three main issues for teachers all along have been financial compensation, part-year salary grid considerations for some teachers and working conditions.

"You have to give a little to get a little," she said.

The head of the 1,600 teacher-union has stated previously demands for wage parity with their secondary school teaching counterparts in Halton.

The Halton public board now has only one employee group working without a new contract. The Halton District Educational Assistants Association has had three mediation talks with the board but the sides are still at an impasse. EAs consists of about 400 permanent and term-specific workers as well as about 120 casual and supply personnel who work in special education.

EAs have been working to rule since the group announced it was putting 13 sanctions in place effective Sept. 2.
