Source of Song concert puts focus on songwriters

Whether it was taking part in local coffee houses or scribbling songs outside of his wife's painting studio at the Williams Mill Creative Arts Studios, songwriter Bruce Madole has always felt inspired by the charm and creative vibe of Glen Williams. It's one of the reasons he chose the Glen Williams Town Hall as a venue to host the first Source of the Song concert tomorrow (Saturday), 2-5 pm.

Intended to highlight the songwriter's craft, Madole has assembled a small group of talented songwriters and musical friends. These include six-time CCMA Guitarist of the Year Wendell Ferguson, hit songwriter and producer J.K. Gulley, and singer/songwriters Dan McVeigh and Angela Haskill.

"I believe there's a tremendous magic at work when you hear original songs performed by the people who wrote them," said Madole. "Sometimes you hear a song on the radio, and it's a hit, perhaps for more than one artist ... and then you hear it performed by the writer and the song assumes a whole new meaning. Maybe in the end, it's the songs that have the power, but when you hear them performed by the writer — that's high voltage."

Madole has shared stages with such artists as Thomas Wade, Giselle (from Lace), Jamie Warren and J.K. Gulley and has been an active member of the Canadian country music scene, where he has developed a growing list of cuts and co-writes with such writers as Gulley, Marie Bottrell, Johnny Reid, Ferguson, and John Landry.

The Source of the Song concert is part of the Headwaters Arts Festival. Tickets will be $10 (advance) and $12 at the door, and are available at Best's Harbour, at Studio 7 in the Williams Mill Creative Arts Studio, or by contacting Bruce Madole at 905-459-9753.
