

Halton Region holds well water information session for rural residents

Rural residents can learn more about protecting their well water's safety and maintaining their well at an information session being hosted by Halton Region in Halton Hills next week.

The session will be held Thursday, October 9, 3 to 9 p.m. at Stewarttown Public School.

At the session residents can talk to public health inspectors about their well water concerns, have their water tested for nitrate, pick up water sample bottles so their water can be tested for bacteria, learn about water treatment systems that can correct water problems from local companies, talk to professional well drillers from the Ontario Ground Water Association and staff from Halton Region's Planning and Public Works Department to discuss water conservation principles, and review your well water records.

The Health Department continues to promote regular well water testing for anyone using water from private wells. Well water depots are located throughout Halton where residents can pick up sampling bottles and drop off water samples Monday through Thursday between 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. In Georgetown the depot is located at the Georgetown Health Department office at 93 Main St.

Starting this month the Health Department will start surveying residents who submit water samples for testing to determine whether the process for submitting samples and receiving the test results is meeting the needs of the community.

Those who drop off water will receive a written survey to complete. No personal information will be gathered and results are anonymous.
