*This poem was inspired by the interaction between Alex Trenton, Denturist, and one of his Alzheimer's patients.
It was written by his Office Manager, Iris Stiehl.*

*The unfamiliar place is in front of her
A strong hand helps her entry
There is a sense of uncertainty
She knows it's time for a change, for new Yet she dreads the process*

*It's time for them to meet
With reverence and honor, he offers his hand of support
They walk together to a place of privacy
Where none can see her without Where none can see the sudden change*

*During their meeting, there is an unspoken understanding
An understanding of her need for dignity
Of respecting her as an elder and an equal
Of taking her gently thru the process
A bond of trust has formed, they begin together*

*Thru the many stages, her face and her smile guides him Giving her the youthfulness she is seeking
Time has come, the day is here, she has arrived
They are offered to her like a gift
She accepts them with her fragile hands*

*As she shifts them into place, making sure they are seated
Her eyes focus on the mirror image
She follows her contours, seeing all angles
Then comes the smile, not just a smile
A smile with recognition of that which was and now is again.*

*As they part, the light of her face shines on all
And he who has been with her since her youth, sees his bride again
Not just the new smile that has been created
Not just the years that seemed to have magically melted away
But the playful spark and excitement that has risen from within.*
