Moving on after the election

The people have spoken. Now our 24-member Progressive Conservative Party caucus has to figure out what they said.

The election result was bittersweet. I am humbled to have won Halton for a third time, especially in the face of the provincial result. I'd like to thank Halton residents for their faith in me and their vote of confidence in our management of Ontario.

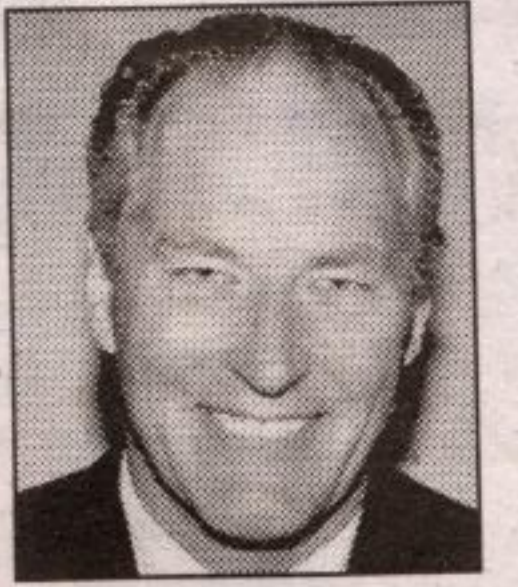

I would also like to give a heartfelt thank you to those people who volunteered their time to work on my behalf and on behalf of the Ontario PC Party. Thanks to those efforts I will again proudly carry the Tory banner into the Legislature.

However, the defeat of so many good members is a sharp loss for the province. As we move forward their experience will be missed.

I still believe the central issue of the campaign was continued prosperity in Ontario, however, I think our party strategists mistakenly tried to make leadership an issue. Here in Halton, people understood the importance of a strong economy, they saw the need to chop away at taxes and the need to take politics out of the classroom by ending the threat of education strikes.

Already the Liberals have backslid on some of their promises. They will announce a deficit in this year's budget, one that would not have occurred if we had remained in power. We had planned to make some adjustments to spending, in order to balance the books, as we did the previous four consecutive years. It will be his choice alone, when Premier Dalton McGuinty's promises not to raise taxes and to maintain a balanced budget are not met.

QUEEN'S PARK REPORT

Still, we have to move forward. We will soon name our ministry critics. We will make sure that Ontario's prosperity is foremost in the minds of the government. However, I will take no joy in hammering the Liberals on their tax-and-spend ways.

Each tax increase, deficit or ill-conceived program the Liberals enact, puts Ontario one step further away from the strong, prosperous province we had on October 2. It also means one more battle we will have to fight when we return to Queen's Park in 2007.

—Ted Chudleigh is the MP for Halton

is it worth it?

Someday, you'll be offered a cigarette or be tempted to smoke. Before you start, think about it: every drag you take screws up your body.

Smoking can cause permanent damage to your body. Once a person starts, it becomes extremely tough to quit. And did we mention all that cash you'll be blowing in the process?

So, if you're tempted to start, ask yourself, "Is it worth it?"

As if dying in your 30's isn't hard enough to swallow...
What if you needed a fistful of pills just to digest your food?
