Streetproofing your children

We have all read in the paper about incidents that have happened outside of our community that make us think about our own children, and their safety.

Because of their young age and innocence, people sometimes lure them with promises of candy, or money, or use trickery. It is difficult for the police to prevent child molestation or stranger abduction because it is a crime of opportunity. You can, however, streetproof your child and greatly reduce the risk by going over a few points of safety with them.

- Explain to your child that a stranger is anyone that they do not know, even if he/she seems to know them. Never put your child's name on an item of clothing, backpack or lunch bag where strangers can read it.
- Insist that your child takes the same route to and from school. That way if they are late home, you know where to start looking. Encourage them to walk with other children.
- Tell your children that they should never accept a ride from anyone, even someone who is known to them, unless it has been prearranged. The majority of child predators are someone who is already known to the family.
- It is not appropriate for adults to ask children for directions. Tell your child to keep walking and not to approach a vehicle, if one is involved.
- Teach your children to scream, kick, bite, or do whatever they can if someone grabs them. They need to draw as much attention as they can. (This is a tough one, because we usually tell our children to be polite and respect adults.) Report any such incidents to police as soon as possible.

- Know where your children are. Insist that they tell you where they are going, and when they will be home.

If your child tells you that he/she has been approached or hurt by anyone you should support your child by saying:

I believe you.
 I'm glad that you told me.
 It's not your fault.
 I will do something about it.

Often a child will not tell anyone about it because they do not know how to explain what has happened, and they are afraid of being blamed or not being believed.

Lastly, keep an open dialogue with your children, no matter what their age. They need to know that they can talk and be listened to. All kids, young and old, need hugs and love. Our children are precious.
