Business owner fined

A Halton Hills business owner was fined $1,000 in Milton court recently for improper storage of combustibles.

A spokesperson for Halton Hills Fire Protection and Prevention Services said Mohammad A. Qureshi of Ash's Auto Sales pleaded guilty to contravening the Fire Protection and Prevention Act in court last Monday.

The spokesperson said the charges were related to the storage of combustibles at his business between April 2003 and July 2004. The spokesperson said the storage of the items was a fire hazard, and in contravention of the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, and Qureshi did not correct the matter.

"This was basically a housekeeping issue," said Chief of Prevention and Public Education, John Martin. "The risk was real and would have definitely impacted fire suppression activities."

The inappropriate storage of combustibles increases the potential of a fire occurring and the increased fuel load results in larger, hotter more dangerous fires, he said.
