Police need help in identifying woman's remains

Ontario Provincial Police are seeking help from the public in identifying a woman whose decomposed body was found in a wooded picnic area near Rockwood on Sunday.

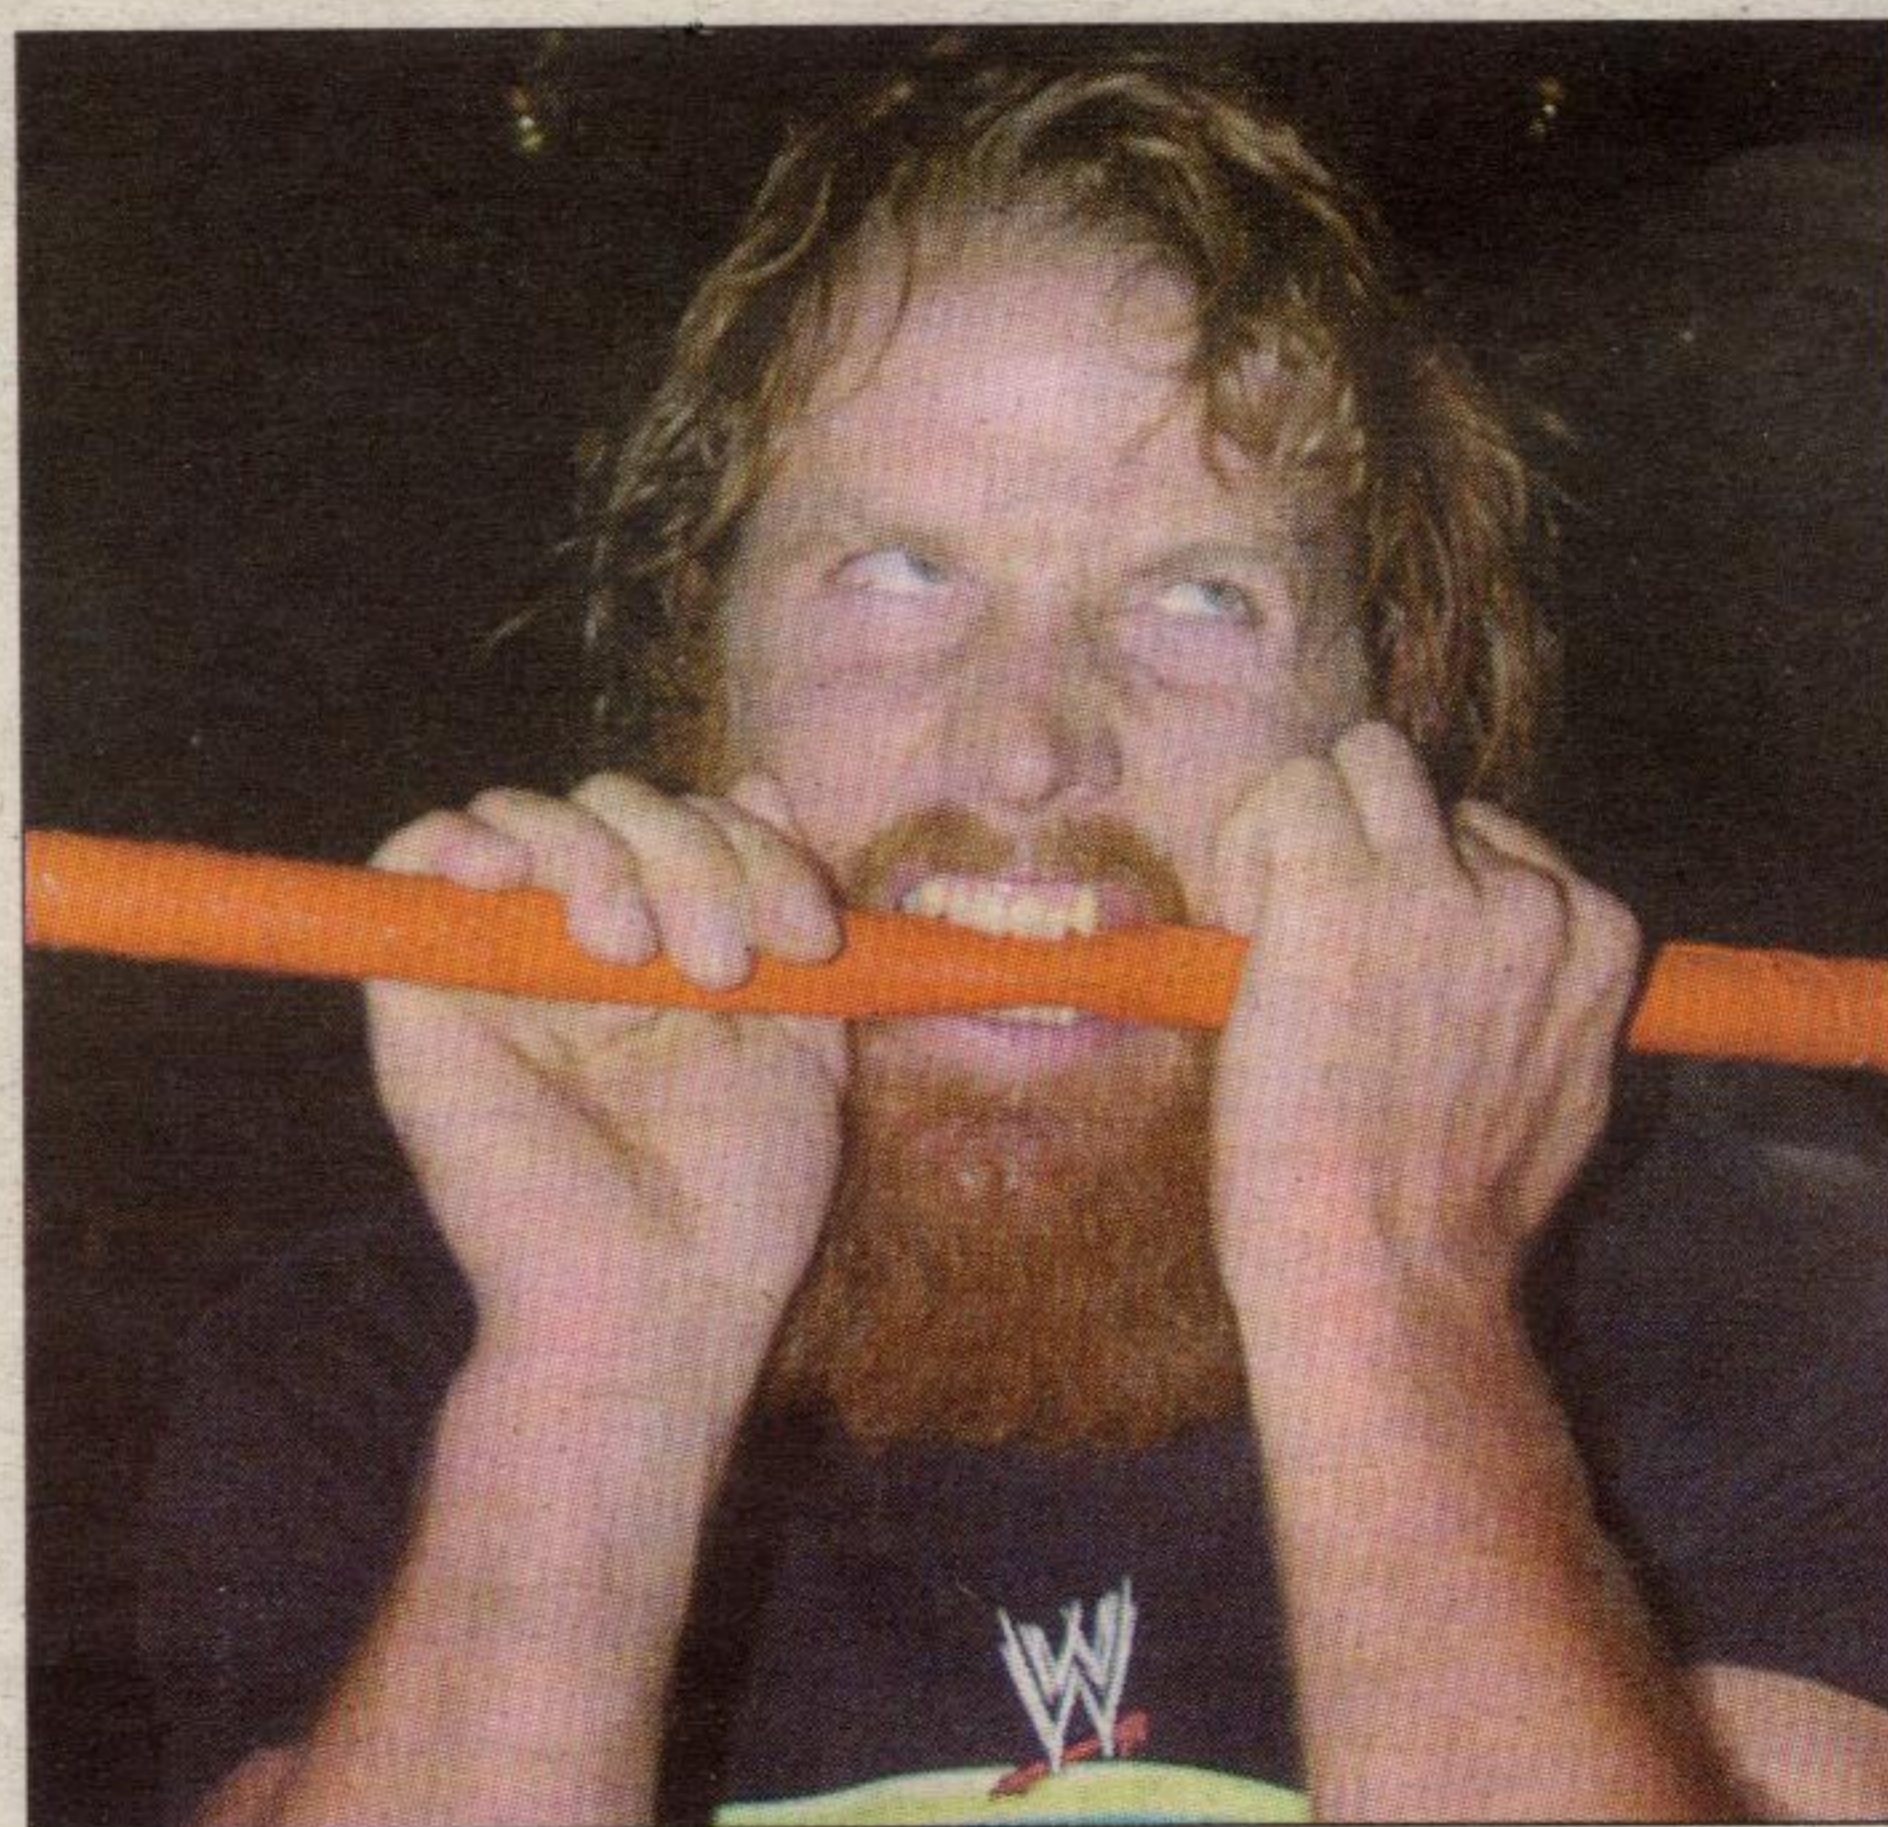

Coroners have compiled a sketchy description of the woman.

Investigators said she was a white woman between 25 and 45 years of age. She stood about five foot six and weighed about 130 pounds. The woman had a partial upper dental plate because she had lost some of her teeth, and she had sustained a fractured left cheekbone sometime before her death, police said.

Those are the few pieces of the puzzle investigators have managed to fit together, but there are still many missing.

"We are having trouble figuring out her identity," said Wellington County OPP Constable Jennifer Smith. "It's paramount we determine who this woman is and how she died in order to enable us to look at suspects."
