Town libraries called 'an embarrassment'

Consultant suggests new $11.8M facility is needed

lthough parking con-cerns and staff space limitations were of prime importance at Thursday night's Halton Hills Public Library Facility Site Study public forum, consultant Jim Morgenstern of dmA Planning and Management Service summed up the state of the facilities of Halton Hills Library in one brief statement.

"The library facilities are an embarrassment to the Town."

Morgenstern "Halton Hills has great schools, civic buildings and arenas, not to mention the community centre, but the libraries are an embarrassment."

The meeting, held in the Gallery of the Cultural Centre, was the third of three public forums held to garner public input before the report is presented to council in mid-November. Meetings were also held in the Gellert Centre Oct. 1, and Wednesday night at Acton branch of Halton Hills Library.

The site study, requested by Halton Hills Public Library Board, gave a brief history of existing facilities from 1981, and their ability to serve the Town, then extrapolated the needs of the library to accommodate the Town's needs until the year 2021, when there will be a projected population in excess of 70,000.

Although the report acknowledged the need to upgrade or replace the Acton library facility, the focus of the study was the Georgetown facility and how to deal with its shortcomings.

Morgenstern said the Town will need 33,000 square feet of library facilities to properly serve Georgetown and the rural areas of Halton Hills by 2021, and the current Church St. location has only 12,000 sq. ft., which is spread over two floors, making it less efficient than a single storey layout.

He illustrated the newest trends in library design, showing examples of newly constructed facilities with an abundance of natural light, and a more welcoming entrance and check-out desk. New libraries have also been including 'reading gardens,' outdoor areas that are conducive to reading and study, as well as wireless networks to allow patrons to use laptops anywhere in the building.

"Parking is one major constraint of this (Georgetown) facility," said Morgenstern, "But not the only one. The lack of work space, program rooms and staffing space— a situation the general public doesn't see— are all shortcomings of this facility."

Various scenarios were presented, ranging from a completely new 33,000 sq. ft. facility, to various compromises, including keeping the existing Church St. location and adding a 21,000 sq. ft. facility in town. Another slight deviation to the proposal included downsizing the Church St. facility to 6,000 square feet and creating a

The Georgetown branch of the Halton Hills Library is cramped and too small according to a Photos by Yves Desjardins consultant's report which calls for a new $11.8M library.

27,000 square foot facility elsewhere.

The concept of retaining the original Church St. facility and constructing another 21,000 sq. ft. building appeared to appeal to the crowd, but Morgenstern pointed out that maintaining two locations in Georgetown would add about $440,000 to the annual operating budget of $2 million.

By the end of the presentation, Morgenstern unveiled the 'first choice' which was to build a completely new 33,000 sq. ft. facility = elsewhere in town, suggesting the town could possibly reassign the existing space at the Church St. location to other uses.

Morgenstern outlined numerous Town-owned sites that were possible locations for the facility.

Sites considered were:

 Gellert Community Centre lands, located in close proximity to the existing Gellert Centre

 Civic Centre lands, located adjacent to the Town Civic Centre

• Former Dominion Seed property

Trafalgar Sports Park land

 Fire Department property on Maple Avenue

Memorial Arena site

Cedarvale Park

 Mold-Masters SportsPlex land

The study went on to eliminate those sites that weren't feasible due to servicing or size and the final recommendation was to build a 33,000 square foot facility on the Dominion Seed property, with the Gellert Centre site coming in as a second possible choice.

Morgenstern suggested the

'The lack of work space, program rooms and staffing space— a situation the general public doesn't see— are all shortcomings of this facility.'

> —Consultant Jim Morgenstern

plan would have to undergo a number of studies to determine needs and funding, and felt construction could begin in early spring of 2008, and open for the fall of 2009.

He estimated the cost to be in the area of $11.8 million.

Questions from the floor centered around the existing Church St. location, and its fate if the plan were adopted.

"I fully acknowledge the attachment to this existing (Church St.) facility," said Morgenstern, "Especially to the longtime residents of the town, and local attachment is certainly a factor that the board and town would have to deal with."

Some in the audience didn't agree with Morgenstern's comments about parking.

"I see this parking (issue) has become a heated discussion," said resident Trevor Raymond, "But I sometimes feel the lack of parking is something of a myth, even if I had to park in the Municipal Parking Lot behind Young's Pharmacy and walk up to the Church St. location. When I go > to downtown Toronto, and find a parking spot that close to the place I'm going, I feel like I've died and gone to heaven."

Others suggested taking an existing building in town and converting it to a 33,000 sq. ft. library, thereby saving money. Morgenstern was quick to disagree, pointing out that converting existing structures is usually not feasible because they weren't built for the unique needs of a library, and more money would be spent on retrofitting with a sub-standard facility as a result.

Another woman in the group expressed concern about moving the library out of the downtown core, saying it would also impact the local businesses downtown, as there would be less people in the Halton Hills Public Library Board is asking for public comments on the site study, and will be including them when the report is presented to council in mid-November.

The report is available at both branches of the library, as well as on-line at the library's web site, www.library.hhpl.on.ca.

> —By Ted Brown, staff writer

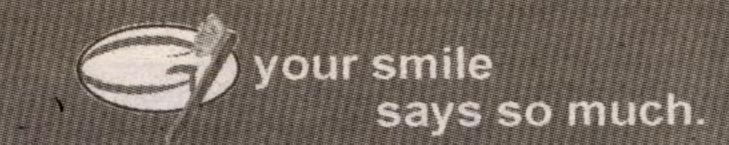

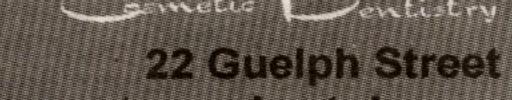

The Acton branch of the Halton Hills Library should be upgraded or replaced according to consultant who deemed the town's libraries 'an embarrassment'.

ZOON TOOTH WHITENING SYSTEM

Shade changes of 6 to 10 shades in about an hour

downtowngeorgetowndental.com

(905)877-4371