The right lights boost home security

The best outdoor security does not call for installation of the brightest lights you can find, blinding everyone in the vicinity, say specialists in this field. What you need is effective security lighting and that means putting it where you need it— and nowhere else.

"Effective security lighting also means eliminating glare, light trespass, harsh shadows, and steep transitions from light to dark," says Janny Hogen Esch, spokesperson for Philips Lighting. The right lighting assists with such everyday practicalities as seeing objects in the dark, avoiding obstacles in your path, and finding your keys quickly at night. All combined, effective lighting increases your household safety and security.

duced the Marathon compact fluorescent reflector line at Philips," Hogen Esch continued. "It is a long life, low-energy bulb, which can be controlled by a photoelectric cell or a motion sensor. The illumination is direct, but not harsh, requires no warm up period, and the low wattage makes it environmentally friendly and inexpensive to operate."

For optimum security, remember to position your security lights in a downward position, out of arms reach so that they cannot be disabled or destroyed by intruders. "And if you find that position hard to reach for changing the light bulb, you needn't worry," says Hogen Esch. "The estimated life of the Marathon Reflector is an impressive seven years."
