

Fire safety in the kitchen

It's where the most home fires start

The kitchen is where most home fires in Canada start. Cooking oil and grease fires are often the cause.

These types of fires are fast spreading, and very destructive, even fatal. In only a few minutes, the oil overheats and the vapours ignite.

Follow these simple safety tips to reduce the risk of fire in your kitchen

Never leave items on the stove unattended.

Keep stove area clear. Curtains, pot holders, dish towels and food packaging can easily catch fire.

Never wear loose clothing while cooking.

Turn pot handles toward the centre of the stove.

Never carry a burning pan, as it may spread the fire.

Turn off stoves and cooking appliances immediately after you are finished cooking.

Stove-top grease fires

Always heat oil slowly over moderate heat. Never pour water on any cooking fire. Water causes grease fires to spread. To prevent the fire from re-igniting, use a fire extinguisher.

Oven fires

Close the oven door and turn off the oven.

Microwave fires

Keep the door closed and unplug or turn off the microwave.
