It's Halloween – Let's have a party!

For one night a year, ghouls, ghosts, witches and goblins have free reign, scurrying up and down the street from house to house. There's no limit to the kind of creature you may encounter, except for that of imagination! Each year, children become excited as October rolls around, anticipating the fun of dressing up, and of course, the trick-or-treating that is part of the Halloween tradition.

Another fun way to celebrate Halloween is to have a party. Need some ideas to get inspired? Try the old favourite, the Haunted House party. With a little dry ice and ominous lighting, you can make a spooky fog that thrills and chills. Get some volunteers to pose as ghosts and witches to lead your guests through a "graveyard", complete with spooky music and scary sounds.

As a reward for making it "safely" through the haunted house, offer some treats. These can be prepared before the party, but even better, make it part of the occasion. Decorate sugar cookies in Halloween shapes with black or orange icing, gummy worms, or candy sprinkles. There are lots of spooky treats to make.

Try a pumpkin carving party. Everyone should have their own pumpkin, and the best part is they can take them home to light the way for others on Halloween night. Telling ghost stories, making costumes or playing Halloween party games are some other suggestions. The Internet is a great source of ideas.

A party could also be an alternative to trick-or-treating. The advantages are many, especially for younger children. There's less worry about children's safety as they mingle with cars and strangers on their journey around the neighbourhood. Many parents would also feel better about the snacks their children will eat.

If you are worried about the safety issues associated with trick-or-treating, a party might be a good alternative. (Photo JP)
