

October is Fire Safety Month

Check the age of your smoke alarm

More than five million Canadian households have smoke alarms more than 10 years old. These must be replaced.

We expect that other appliances which run 24 hours a day, 7 days a week—like refrigerators—to eventually age, and it is the same with the life-saving smoke alarm.

Just checking the batteries only confirms that they are live, when in fact the smoke alarm sensor may not be working properly, because it degrades over time.

In Ontario it is the law to have a working smoke alarm on every level of the home.

How to check if your smoke alarm is more than 10 years old:

Remove smoke alarm and check the back of the unit for either a manufacturing date or 'Best Before' date.

If the manufacturing date is more than 10 years old, you should replace the unit.

If the 'Best Before' date indicated has expired, you should replace the unit.

If there are no dates, try and make an educated guess whether it is more than 10 years old by looking at its condition. If in doubt, replace it.
