MEET... Savvy Staging Solutions

This festive holiday season brings family gatherings, holiday cheer and various traditions to those who reside in Halton Hills. If you are thinking of listing your home at this time of year and you plan to 'deck the halls' be mindful of the following:

- Cluttered and / or cramped areas that display too many decorative elements
- Holiday themes that may offend prospective buyers or be distracting to the eye.
- Decorative elements that may minimize the features of the home.

• A large Christmas tree or numerous decorations that will limit the space and have prospective buyers question the function and size of the room.

• Cleanliness of the home and overall appearance. Is your home spotless, depersonalized and prepared for ALL showings?

It may seem unreasonable to minimize the amount of holiday decorating but ask yourself where you would like to be in the New Year. If your answer is in your new home, then you know what to do - have it staged. Limit the holiday cheer just this once and instead, decorate with tasteful arrangements of greenery, white lights and a smaller tree or perhaps, no tree at all.

It is not a mistake to decorate for the holidays but your goal is to sell your house for top dollar and within a reasonable amount of time. Arrange to have your property shown in the best light possible (and no, I am not referring to those 'lovely' flashing, dangling icicle lights). Prospective buyers should remember the features of your property not the tune to a singing Santa or that your 8 ft Christmas tree was beautifully decorated. You want prospective buyers to appreciate all aspects of the house, so they may envision themselves within the space and think about creating their own traditions and holiday fun within the home.
