BACK TALK

By Dr. Gabor Madarasz

"Dr. Madarasz would you please talk to my son about his back pack?" "Why, what's the problem," I asked? "He refuses to carry it on both shoulders and it seems to have every book he owns in it", exclaimed Ruth. "Look, I'll do my best but it's not easy changing habits."

Here's what all parents and kids should know. In 2001, reported in Ontario, more than 7,000 people required a trip to the emergency room due to pac-related injuries. Several other interesting facts were noted. Among children age 12 to 18 it was stated that 75 percent suffer from some form of back pain with backpack weight being a large contributor to this statistic. International guidelines suggest that kids should carry no more than 10 percent of their total body weight in their backpack. According to an Italian study, one-third of school children regularly carried more than 30 per cent of their body weight in their backpack.

"The problem Ruth, is this kind of daily stress and strain can lead to serious back pain, changes in posture and gait, and potential irritation and injury of the spine, joints and muscles. I know, that's why I want you to talk to him. It always seems to have more impact coming from you!" "Alright, alright, I'll do my best!"
