A Greenbelt for All

Ontario's Greenbelt is home to thousands of fruit trees but you can't pick their fruit while sitting in a wheelchair.

That's where WindReach Farm comes in. On this 109-acre farm, horses, sheep, cows and hay wagons are available to those with disabilities and special needs.

WindReach Farm is unique among more than 7,000 farms on 1.8 million acres of protected Greenbelt land and like the Greenbelt, it is world-leading. It gives people with physical, emotional and mental challenges a place to participate in a rural lifestyle and experience nature up close.

"It's important that the Greenbelt remains accessible through programs like ours," said Penny Smith, Executive Director of the farm. "Everyone should be able to enjoy Ontario's vibrant landscape."

That's what Sandy Mitchell envisioned in 1989 when he bought the farm located 20 kilometres north of Whitby. Mitchell has cerebral palsy and with the help of his friends he designed a working farm that allowed him to participate in a traditional farm life and interact with nature.

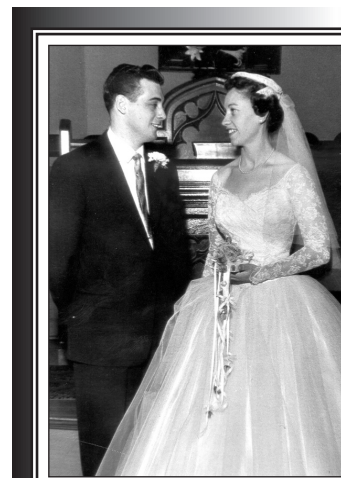

More than 100 volunteers help out at WindReach, ensuring the 22,000 annual visitors experience farm life to the fullest.

Innovative ideas abound including a sensory room providing relaxation and leisure activities to those with sensory, intellectual and physical disabilities. The petting zoo is also a favourite stop.

The Hon. David C. Onley, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario was just announced Honorary Patron. "The Lieutenant Governor's support for accessibility is a perfect fit with the farm's mission," said Smith.

"We strive to make every visitors experience one to remember, no matter who they are," said Smith. Visit www.WindReach.org for more information.
