Attend an Open House and find out how Cross Connection Control Can Work for You

Halton Region delivers safe and high quality drinking water to its commercial, institutional and residential customers. The provision of clean, safe drinking water is an important responsibility, and Halton is amongst the leaders in water purification technology. Halton Regional Council approved the Cross-Connection Control By-Law #157-05 on November 15, 2005 the Cross-Connection Control Program came into effect January 1, 2006.

Cross Connection Control or backflow prevention, helps to ensure that the drinking water supply is protected against the entry of contaminants, pollutants, infectious agents or other materials and substances that may enter from outside sources.

Halton Region is hosting a series of Public Information Centres to provide industrial, commercial and institutional property owners and residents with information on Cross Connection and the steps you can take to prevent contamination of our drinking water supply.
