There are several easy ways to clean green around the home

When it comes to cleaning around the house, adding some green to your routine is easier than you might think. From reducing unnecessary waste, to using products that are less harmful to the earth, you can help clean up the environment while cleaning up your house. Before you embark on this year's cleaning mission, consider the following environmentally friendly cleaning practices.

In the laundry room

- When washing clothes, use concentrated detergent and bleach— such as Ultra Javex Bleach by Clorox— that come in a smaller container and require a reduced dose per load. Doing so will result in fewer bottles being used, which will in turn help reduce unnecessary waste.

- To cut down on water-use, do one large load of laundry rather than multiple small loads.

- Wash clothes in cold water. A great deal of energy is used just to heat the water, and today's coldwater detergents and bleaches are capable of washing clothes effectively in cold water.

In the kitchen and bathroom

- Use bleach-based cleaners to clean hard, non-porous surfaces around the house. Bleach is an effective cleaner and it breaks down mostly to salt and water during use and disposal.

- Use bleaches that are made with sodium hypochlorite for effective household cleaning and laundry whitening. These bleaches are multipurpose, whereas bleaches made with hydrogen peroxide are limited to laundry use only.

- When cleaning countertops and fixtures, use reusable cloths or rags rather than disposable paper towels.

In the living room

- Rather than using chemical carpet cleaners, treat carpet stains by lightly sprinkling baking soda over the carpet. Rub it into the fabric and then vacuum the area after one hour.

- Polish furniture with a mixture of one teaspoon of lemon juice and one cup of vegetable oil. Apply the mixture to your furniture using a reusable cloth.
