Two local girls call Kenya trip 'life-changing'

ERIN CARTER
Special to The IFP

Two Halton Hills girls recently returned from a life-changing adventure in Kenya.

Courtney Craig-Campbell and Erin Carter spent three weeks in the rural village of Emori Joi as part of a volunteer and leadership trip with the not-for-profit organization Free the Children.

"I have a different outlook on life now," said Carter.

Free the Children is a Toronto-based organization, which was established in 1995 by former child activist Craig Keilburger. The main objectives of the organization are to free children from poverty and exploitation, and to inspire youths to make a difference in the world. Free The Children is the world's largest network of children helping children through education, with more than one million youth involved in innovative education and development programs in 45 countries.

During their volunteer trip, the girls traveled with a group of 24 university-aged participants from across North America, with the goal to construct a schoolhouse.

"Not only did we achieve our goal, we completed many other projects and we have a future action plan," said Craig-Campbell.

Overall, the group built two schools from the foundation, completed two milk. To think young girls must carry barrels of water on their back daily, instead of going to school."

The experience had such an impact on their group, that they have decided to continue their involvement with developing nations.

"Our group has created a campaign called Well Worth It, dedicated to raising awareness and funds to have well systems implemented in developing nations, through the assistance of Free the Children," Craig-Campbell said. After seeing the conditions, the group launched a plan to have a well built in Emori Joi.

The group's immediate goal is to raise $70,000 by December 31, 2008 to have a well constructed.

If you would like further information or to learn how your organization/school can become involved, or donate to this cause please contact Carter and Craig-Campbell at: wellworthitcampaign@gmail.com. Tax receipts are available from Free the Children for all donations.
