Reflecting on the past

Two-year-old Madison Connors of Georgetown checks out her reflection in the hubcap of a 1940 Buick Super Coupe at the 9th Annual Georgetown's Rock'n Roll'n Classics Main Street Car Show last Friday. Proceeds of the popular event, that drew a large crowd, went to Georgetown Hospital.

Local businesses not hurting from Maple Leaf meat recall

LISA TALLYN
Staff Writer

Only one sub shop in town is reporting any negative impact on business from the listeria outbreak that has been linked to 12 deaths and seen more than 220 ready-to-eat meat products pulled from Canadian store shelves and restaurants.

Garrett Kent of Subway on

Mountainview Rd. (north of Guelph St.) said they have "experienced fewer customers this week" even though they don't use any of the affected products.

He said lots of customers are asking if their meat is Maple Leaf brand and some are opting for alternatives to cold meat sandwiches.

The outbreak has actually meant more business for Georgetown's McMaster Meats & Deli said Amber

Bonnett, manager of the Main St. store.

"We have gotten busier because we cook our own meat," said Bonnett.

She added any of the deli meat they sell comes from a private supplier, not Maple Leaf Foods or any of the other affected brands.

"We do have to answer a lot of questions," she added.
