Association welcomes new blood

"It's great to have that new blood continually coming in and wanting to keep improving at it," said 59-year-old Brian Peavoy, who has officiated since 1967, including several years at the junior level with the Ontario Hockey Association.

"You can tell fairly quickly which ones are pretty keen to learn and want to get the call to do a big playoff game."

Those big games also involve some risks in the job description, including being able to break up scuffles and dodge those black missiles made up of hard vulcanized rubber, all while wearing far less protection than the game's participants. Verbal abuse from spectators can also be expected, although Smith says the "constructive criticism from the crowd" can sometimes even be entertaining.

"To be honest, you hear about incidents with fans verbally abusing referees, but it's not that big a deal and it gets blown out of proportion a lot of the time," the native of Manitoulin Island said. "Sometimes you hear some of the comments and yes they're quite funny, but you keep it to yourself, as long as it doesn't cross the line. What we're finding is that those who act out against the officials will soon find themselves separated from the rest of the

They've yet to officially earn their stripes to officiate minor hockey games in the local area but several youngsters will graduate upon successfully completing an Ontario Minor Hockey Association clinic held in Georgetown this weekend.
