Cable service KO'd after line cut

Most Cogeco customers in Georgetown were without cable television, phone and Internet service for several hours Sunday after someone cut and removed 100 metres of fibre optic cable on 17 Sideroad, east of Fourth Line, around 4:30 a.m. Sunday.

The overhead cable was strung between two poles. Maureen Tilson Dymont of Cogeco said it took several hours for the cable to be replaced.

"It is a challenging job because there can be up to 90 fibre strands in a cable," said Tilson Dymont.

She said service for some customers was restored by 3 p.m., the majority had their cable service back by 5 p.m., and all service was restored by 6:30 p.m.

Tilson Dymont called the incident "puzzling", adding Cogeco had never experienced a situation where someone had climbed a pole to remove cable.

"This isn't a salvageable cable. There is no copper in it all," stressed Tilson Dymont. "If people are climbing poles they have to be very careful in that regard. We do power our equipment."
