Trees properly planted...

of light? Will it be placed in a shaded area? If you need help choosing a tree, talk to your local nursery. They are valuable sources of information.

When you select a tree, be sure to choose one that's the right size. If you think bigger is better, think again. Smaller trees establish root systems faster than larger trees and are more likely to survive. Plus, they're cheaper to buy.

Be careful when transporting your tree home. Never pick it up by the trunk, rather, lift it from the root ball.

Once you get ready to dig at home, remember to not plant the tree too deeply. A good rule of thumb is to dig planting holes two to three times wider than the root ball and the same depth.

After your tree is planted, water and fertilize it well. Young trees need more water than established ones, so be sure yours get enough to drink. Trees need the equivalent of one inch of rainfall every week. A slow-release fertilizer will provide your new tree with a continuous supply of needed nutrients.

With just a little bit of planning and the right products, you can be assured your newly planted tree will thrive.
