VOX POP

Are you a romantic? Will you celebrate Valentine's Day with your sweetie, or do you think February 14 is just another Hallmark holiday?

Sam Butt, Georgetown, married 10 years

"We don't celebrate Valentine's Day - we act like that everyday, and I show and tell her I love her everyday. We don't go out to dinner or do anything special just because it's a cash money-maker for flower places and card companies."

Jennifer Phillips, Toronto, married less than three years and expecting first child

"Every day that I wake up next to my husband is like Valentine's Day. We might have a special dinner, but we both say 'I love you' daily, and we make every day special."

David Colvin, Acton, married 33 years

"My birthday is February 15, so I get a lot of heart-shaped birthday cakes. I'm still sentimental and will get a card or flowers or go out to dinner with Helen. There's not enough romance in the world."

Neil Louch, Osprige, married for eight years

"It's a special kind of day to do something for someone special - maybe go out to dinner or make a candle-lit dinner at home. I'm a romantic - I like that kind of stuff."

Warming car can be lethal

"Warming your car in the garage or just outside the garage with the door open is a very dangerous habit", says Chief Olivieri of Halton Hills Fire Protection & Prevention Services. "The cold weather is prompting people to warm their vehicles in the garage and this practice has potentially deadly results."

Fire crews have responded to a number of carbon monoxide detector activations over the past few days and two of them revealed that vehicles were running in the garage or just outside the garage with the doors left open.

"Because the garages are not completely sealed from the home, carbon monoxide can leak into the home, slowly poisoning the occupants inside," Olivieri says.

Blowing and drifting snow have also been found to be the cause of carbon monoxide injuries. The more modern, high efficiency furnaces, gas fireplaces and water heaters usually vent directly to an outside wall. These installations normally do not require a chimney and as a result can become plugged with drifting snow.

"When the appliances cannot vent adequately, the unburned gases containing carbon monoxide re-enter the home exposing the occupants to the deadly gas," Olivieri says. Residents with appliances that are equipped with direct vents, are urged to inspect them and ensure they are free and clear of any snow or ice build up.

Carbon monoxide exposure can produce flu-like symptoms such as headaches, nausea, dizziness, confusion and even loss of consciousness.
