Brewery sponsors anti-beer garden

The irony of a “anti-beer garden” being sponsored by the Steam Whistle Brewery was not lost on several Halton Hills councillors who questioned the connection during last week’s council meeting when the Big Daddy Father’s Day festival was being discussed.

Sponsored by the Halton Hills Cultural Roundtable, the first ever Big Daddy festival involves family activities in Acton and Georgetown to publicly celebrate dads. Doug Lounsbury, representing B2C – Businesses to Community – said they are staging a Chill Zone – or anti-beer garden – in Georgetown as part of the festival, sponsored by Steam Whistle Brewing which will be the sole provider of beer and do all of the marketing.

He said the concept for the Chill Zone is a drop-in area for dads to relax and have a couple of beers and a sandwich with their families, but not stay all day in a beer garden.

“I just find a little bit of irony that you call it anti-beer (yet it’s) being run and served by Steam Whistle Brewery,” said Councillor Bryan Lewis, adding he hopes it is a success.
