BRIGHTEST ANIMAL

Association with man evidently does not help an animal to increase its intelligence, according to reports. In a controversy regarding the intelligence of the animal world the claims of the cat, dog and horse were summarily dismissed on the ground that they learn their tests and tricks by the trial and error method, much as man learns to ride a bicycle without applying any brain power. Professor Cyril Burt, the well-known psychologist, championed the chimpanzee as his animal intellectual. Then an official of the Brown Animal Institution drew attention to the beaver's ingenuity. But neither of these animals, according to a group of German psychologists, possess the mentality of the elephant. And what of the rest? It does seem as though scientists will have to set these candidates a series of intelligence tests.
