CAN BEAVERS CLIMB TREES? QUESTION FOR NATURALISTS

The woes of the telegraph linemen are never over. Something is happen-Muster Joe Wilcox, 12-year-old cornet- ing all the time. The latest cause for skip what you don't like in a book, and a point on the Canadian National Railways right of way about 20 miles north ental line of the National System. The the Canadian National Telegraphs was a short one. It read: "Two juvenile huntsmen chased a beaver, on the C. N. R. right of way about 20 miles north of Washago, which climed a tree. The only way to get the beaver was to cut the tree down. The lads did so. fell across the wires and crossed them until linemen reached the spot to effect a clearance." It was a uhort notice of trouble but it started a big argument. Naturalists claimed that a beaver is incapable of climbing a tree, unless the tree is on a decided slant, or has plenty of low limbs up which it could scramble. In any event, if the beaver could get up the tree, an agile boy, or man, could ako do so without trouble. Therefore, why bother to cut down the tree? But he linemen who were on the spot claim that they investigated the report and found it correct. The main question is, "Are beavers in Northern Ontario developing kangaroo habita?"
