When you have watched foot races

Some of you have clazamates who do fairly well in their daily recitations, but who lose their heads when examination times comes around. - You know other young people who seem dependable in everyday matters, but when a special occasion arises, requiring all their resourcefuness, they collapse. Energy, either mental or physical, is never superfluous. You need every bit that you have. Do not fritter it away under the impression that the supply is inexhaustible. Keep a reserve of energy for a crisis.

. FAMILY DISCUSSION

Pamily discussion of the right sort is an excellent thing. If a group of brothers and sisters can talk over important questions, advancing reasons for the here, and in the evening contributed to son, attended a Gideon Convention at views they hold, and finding the weak points in the others' arguments, they are getting a worth-while training in logical thinking You family groups carry on discussions in this way, however. When they disagree, they lose their tempers. Most people solve the questions by avolding argument. Since they cannot discuss a question without losing their tempers, they avoid discussion. What they should do is to take their tempers in hand. In these days of perplexing situations, when opinion is so divided as to the best way out, young people need to practice intelligent discustion. The silly childishness of becoming angry just because people do not agree with you, should be mastered, just as you master the habit of bursting into tears when you cannot have your own way. Keen discussions in the family circle, unmarred by displays of temper, will help to fit you young people to do your share in the world of the future.
