"The value of my insurance policy I have never realized until now," said a hard working man to a friend who was standing at his bedside, devising plans for the care of the wife and little ones so soon to become husbandless and fatherless. "It is all I have to leave them," he continued, and I am rewarded now a thousand fold for the self-denial I have exercised at times in order that the policy should be kept good. Wife and babies will not be left penniless, thank God. Tell all my friends," he murmured, "that a life insurance policy is one of the best of comforts on a death-bed."

A young lady on reading the other day, of a girl who had been made crazy by a sudden kiss, called the attention of her uncle, who was in the other room, to the singular occurrence. The old gentleman gruffly demanded what the idiot had gone crazy for? "What did she go crazy for?" archly returned the ingenious maiden, "Why, for more, I suppose."

DR. TALMAGE once remarked that "if a man can pay the premium on a policy of life insurance, it is a mean thing for him to go to heaven while his family goes into the poorhouse."

Brother Avery of the Waukegan Republican tarried a while in the Park on Tuesday last.

The handsome little chapel, which our German Methodist friends have erected on the West-Side is now receiving the finishing touches, and will be dedicated on Sunday Nov. 4th.
