

D. M. ERSKINE, JR.'S INSURANCE & REAL ESTATE JOURNAL.

Vol. 1.

HIGHLAND PARK, ILL., APRIL, 1884.

No. 10.

The Thin Man Moves.

"Are you moving to-day?" asked the man with the cold-tea scheme.

"No, I moved last night," replied the thin man without a shirt-collar.

"High rent?"

"High rent."

"Couldn't agree with your landlord about the rent, hey?"

"We couldn't agree."

"So you moved?"

"I moved."

"That's it, that's just it," said the cold-tea man, emphatically. "Extortionate rent ruins hundreds of homes. A man don't like to live in a hog-pen, yet what can he do about it? He don't like to place his family in a few dingy rooms, but how can he help it? I tell you $8 or $10 a month on rent counts up."

"So it does," indorses the thin man.

"Yes, sir; rapacious landlords break up many households," continued the cold-tea man. "How can a man of limited income afford to buy real-estate in rent and then have nothing to show for it? He can't do it, sir. He has to accommodate himself to circumstances and house his family in a place he is ashamed of. High rents are the great drawback to prosperity. When a man has paid his rent on beer, pennuckle, tobies, pool, cigars, base-ball matches, and cock-fights, what has he left? Nothing, sir, absolutely nothing. His family must suffer. Two cock-tails are a quarter. Set 'em up all-round, 75 cents. There's a dollar plum gone out of sight in a minute. Say it only occurs once every other day. That knocks the spots out of $15 a month. I tell you rents are too high. Take a few pools and lose $5 or $10 a week on them, and you can easily see where exorbitant rents keep a man poor. Why a man can punch half a month's rent into a billiard-table in one night, they are up so. When did you say you moved?"

"Last night," replied the thin man.

"What, in the night-time?"

"Yes. I wanted to avoid the dust on my furniture."

"How much did your landlord raise you?"

"He didn't raise me."

"Why, what was the difference between you, then?"

"It was about the back rent," replied the thin man.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Don't deceive yourself by going without insurance on your property, even for a single day. It is the poorest kind of economy.
