A Peculiar Feeling

Sensation of homesickness has been described, but never more graphically than by a little girl, who, miles away from home and mamma, sat heavy-eyed and at a hotel table.

"No, my head aches."

"What is the matter?"

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I can hardly find words with which to thank you for what your wonderful remedy has done for me. Without it I would by this time have been dead or worse, insane; for when I started to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was in a terrible state. DEWEY TO BE REWARDED.

Hero of Manila Will Undoubtedly Be Rewarded with an Admiralty Troops to Be Sent Him.

Washington, May 4.—Representative Grout, of Vermont, Tuesday introduced in the house the following resolution: "Whereas, The intrepidity and skill displayed by Commodore George Dewey in his daring attack upon the Spanish fleet in Manila harbor and its total destruction, covered as it was by the protecting guns of surrounding forts, marks him as the possessor of high qualities as a naval commander; therefore,

"Resolved, That he ought to be promoted to the rank of admiral, and the president is hereby authorized to nominate him for that rank to the senate, which body is hereby authorized to confirm him, the general laws regulating promotions in the navy to the contrary notwithstanding."

Washington, May 4.—Secretary Long announced Tuesday that as soon as the department received any official report from Commodore Dewey, confirming the press accounts of his victory in the battle of Manila, a cablegram would be sent to the officer congratulating him upon the splendid performance of the American fleet under his direction.

Moreover, said the secretary, as soon as the necessary confirmation is at hand Commodore Dewey will be made admiral in recognition of his valor. This will be accomplished immediately by an executive order designating him acting admiral, just as was done in the case of Capt. Sampson. Later on he probably will be nominated to the senate in the usual course for promotion to the rank of admiral.

Washington, May 4.—Cable communication with Manila is still cut off and no report from Commodore Dewey has yet been received in Washington.

Repeated rumors were afloat during the day to the effect that the British embassy had been advised of the fall of Manila just before the cable communication broke. At five o'clock Tuesday evening Sir Julian declared that he had absolutely no such information.

TROOPS IMPATIENT.

Becoming Restive at Tampa Under Tedious Delay in the Movements of the Army.

Tampa, Fla., May 4.—The transports which are to convey the United States troops from here to Cuba are hastening to Tampa and are expected every hour. Those already here will carry not more than a fifth of the army which has already been mobilized at this point. Several of those now en route have to come from New York. The continued delay of the departure of the invading army has made the soldiers and officers very restless, and much of the spirit which characterized them on first arriving has disappeared, and many of them are expecting developments which will prevent the invasion.

Both Gen. Wade and Gen. Shafter say emphatically that they have no definite information as to the date set for the departure of the troops from Tampa, but they believe it is near at hand. It is the general opinion among the officers that the first invading army will not exceed 10,000 men, and that the remaining 6,000 regulars who are expected to be encamped here within the next few days will remain here with the volunteers, which may also be mobilized here.

While Gen. Shafter is in command Gen. Wade continues to play a conspicuous part in the direction of affairs of the army. When asked if he would remain in Tampa in command of the remaining troops after the army of invasion had sailed, he said emphatically that he would not, but would go with it, and would see the campaign through.

There is now at the camp a sufficient number of batteries to hold any city in Cuba, with the possible exception of Havana, and it is the belief of both Gen. Shafter and Gen. Wade that the army now here could hold its own against a Spanish army of five times its numerical strength.

Thus far it has taxed the railroads to the utmost to haul the troops and sup-

NEEDS OF NAVY.

Expenses as Estimated by the Secretary Will Amount to $18,470,000.

Washington, May 4.—The secretary of the navy has sent to the secretary of the treasury for transmission to congress to be included in the urgent deficiency bill estimates of appropriations required by the navy department to complete the service of the current fiscal year, and the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, amounting to $18,470,000. This is in addition to the $34,019,998 asked for last week by the secretary of war. The items specified, which will be sent to congress at once, are as follows:

Coast signal system, etc., $75,000; equipment of vessels, including coal, etc., $1,000,000; steam machinery, labor and material for repairing vessels, etc., $1,245,000; construction and repair of vessels, etc., $1,500,000; ordnance and ordnance stores, etc., $400,000; for purchase of contingent stores, transportation of supplies, etc., $188,500,000; same for 1899, $300,000; provisions, labor, pay offices, etc., 1898, $2,000,000; same for 1899, $2,000,000.

For keeping vessels attached to the Asiatic squadron provisioned and supplied with coal, ammunition and stores, the transportation of which, the secretary says, will probably necessitate at least the charter and possible purchase of a number of suitable vessels, also to increase the number of small craft attached to the various squadrons, or to replace such as may be disabled, and to meet contingencies that cannot be foreseen, $10,000,000. Total, $18,470,000.

This estimate will be sent to congress at once.

New York, May 4.—Jacob Gramm, a small shopkeeper 50 years old, living on Morton street, on Tuesday murdered two of his children, mortally wounded a third and inflicted fatal wounds on himself. The children are Ella, five years; John, seven years, and a baby, Frank, 1½ years of age. Ella and tary Long has taken immediate measures to relieve the United States fleet in the Pacific of any embarrassment it might feel for want of coal.

Orders have been telegraphed to the government authorities at San Francisco to select two of the swiftest ships at that port, load them with coal and dispatch them at once to the relief of Commodore Dewey's squadron.

As China and Japan delayed making declarations of neutrality, some experts in international law hold that the United States may still obtain coal in eastern ports. Commodore Dewey's achievements, however, have caused the administration to feel that the government should not hesitate to send him supplies at once without waiting to speculate on what eastern ports may be open to him.

KILLED HIMSELF IN JAIL.

Chaska, a Sioux Indian, Who Married Miss Fellows, a Society Belle, Dies in Disgrace.

Niobrara, Neb., May 4.—Samuel Campbell Chaska committed suicide Tuesday. Chaska was a full-blooded Sioux Indian. Ten years ago he graduated with high honors at Carlisle, and shortly became famous by marrying Cora Belle Fellows, of Washington, D. C. Neither the beauty nor wealth of his fashionable society wife nor his learning acquired by years of study at Carlisle could eradicate the Sioux traits that generations had left in his blood. In a few years he drifted back to the reservation and sunk to the level of a common blanket Indian again. His wife left him years ago. Chaska was in jail at the time of his death, charged with stealing horses. This is the first instance in which a full-blooded Sioux ever committed suicide. By marriage the man was related to one of the most prominent families in the east.

PAUNCEFOTE TO LEAVE.

British Ambassador to Be Succeeded by Sir Thomas H. Sanderson, an Experienced Diplomat.

London, May 4.—According to a report published Tuesday the British ambassador at Washington, Sir Julian Pauncefote is to be succeeded by Sir Thomas H. Sanderson, K. C. B., and K. C. M. G., the permanent under secretary of state for foreign affairs, one of the most experienced diplomatic officials in the British service. Sir Thomas Henry Sanderson, K. C. B., K. C. M. G., who has been permanent under secretary of state for foreign affairs since 1894, entered the foreign office in 1859 and has been connected with that department ever since.

Suspicious Circumstances.

Santa Cruz, Cal., May 4.—The coroner has learned that two Spaniards called at certain houses here on the day of the fatal explosion and inquired the direction of the powder works. Operations at the works have been resumed. No one, not excepting employes, is allowed to pass through the gates without a pass. The works are now guarded day and night.

Measles in Camp.

Springfield, Ill., May 4.—Measles have broken out at Camp Tanner, and an isolation hospital has been established. This is kept closely guarded and is in a remote part of the grounds, so that the other soldiers will not get near it. There are now three bad cases of measles in the hospital.

BAYAMO GIVEN UP.

Important Cuban Town Evacuated by General Pando—Occupied by Insurgents.

Montego Bay, Jamaica, via Kingston, Jamaica, May 4.—Gen. Pando, the commander of the Spanish forces in the field, withdrew the Spanish garrison from Bayamo, one of the important towns of the province of Santiago de Cuba, April 25, and refugees who have arrived here from Manzanillo, the port of Bayamo, by the schooner Governor Blake, say that Gen. Calixto Garcia, the insurgent commander, occupied the town the next day.

In Honor of Dewey's Victory.

New York, May 4.—A resolution was passed Tuesday by the board of aldermen and the common council to the effect that as they had abandoned the idea of celebrating Charter day to-day, they would therefore celebrate it as Dewey day.

MRS. O'GRADY WATCHES

Moloch, the Great Dane, Helps Bad 'Cess to Him.

YOUNG SAMUEL PERKINS and his sister Sarah were both away at a house party. Cordelia, the maid, and Helen, the cook, had begged this particular night off for a month in advance, on the plea that they were to be bridesmaids at the wedding of Cordelia's sister. Mrs. Perkins knew when they asked that the Arion ball must be set for that particular Friday night. Cordelia and Helen's relatives always selected the same night for their weddings as that on which the Arion festivities were held. Father and Mother Perkins also had planned to take part in their annual poker game with the Petersons on that identical night at the Petersons' home. This disposition of the household, however, would leave no one in the house except Moloch, the Great Dane. Up to the time of the occurrences here chronicled Moloch had never been credited with any particular intelligence. In this emergency the Perkinses summoned Mrs. O'Grady. She arrived at six o'clock and was instructed to keep the fires burning in the study, the kitchen range and the furnace and to open a third-story window and yell bloody murder if anyone not known to her as a member of the household attempted to get into the house.

All these things Mrs. O'Grady cheerfully promised to do. She laid her bonnet and umbrella in the middle of the dining-room table, hung her cloak on the hall rack and set her overshoes on the study hearth to dry. She surveyed the premises over with evident approval and pride. She saw the Perkinses out of the door with as much ceremony as if they were the guests and she the proprietor.

"My dear," said Mrs. Perkins to Samuel the elder as they stood on the corner waiting for a car, "Mrs. O'Grady is such a comfort. If only that silly dog doesn't take fright from a stranger being in the house and jump out of a window or something, I am sure, aren't you?"

"Of course I am," said Samuel, who was so well acquainted with Mrs. Perkins that he never wasted time asking her to fill out a hiatus.

At half-past five o'clock the next morning the Perkinses approached their home once more. Before Mr. Perkins' hand reached the knob the door opened and Mrs. O'Grady marched out upon them.

"Good morning, Bridget," said Mrs. Perkins, pleasantly.

"It's divil a word of good morning I have to say to you, Mis' Perkins," replied Mrs. O'Grady with surprising hauteur.

"Why, Bridget," said Mr. Perkins, observing the utter dumfounding of Mrs. Perkins. "What is it?"

"Well may ye ask 'what is it?' she said, standing on the sidewalk and brandishing the umbrella at him. "Well may ye ask, you who keep the divil's own dog to worry the soul of a respectable lady that until the present day had no thought but of the greatest respect for you and all your family."

"Ye black-faced, red-eyed, long-toothed, lazy vilyun," she screamed with suddenly increased venom.

"Bridget, how dare you speak to Mr. Perkins so?" said Mrs. Perkins.

"O' darsesake to any man as I please," half screamed Mrs. O'Grady, "but Oi was not regardin' the man, but the baste!"

The Perkinses looked down and saw that Moloch, the dog, stood between them. There was a drawing up of the left side of his upper lip that suggested a satirical grin. (Otherwise his face was as stupid as ever.)

"What in the world has the dog done, Bridget?" asked Mrs. Perkins. "Did he bite you?"

"Bite! Let the baste try onct to do it."

She lowered her tone from that of wild denunciation to that of spirited narration.

"Sit ye both down," she said, "whilst I tell ye the tale of what the baste has done by way of putting insult and bodily misery on me this night."

Side by side the Perkinses sat on the top step and the dog sat behind them and blinked serenely over their heads.

"The two of ye," began Mrs. O'Grady, "went out of the house and left me alone in it but for the two girls, and they went soon after. I had looked to the fires and they needed no tending. The windows they were all down and bolted. I went to the top floor, and the door to the roof it was likewise shut and bolted. So then I sat meself down by the lamp in the parlor with my lace work, for there was naught else to do, and it was too early to think of sleeping. I had no sooner set down than up comes that same divil's baste that sits behind ye now, for all the world as if he were presuming to judge a human being's conduct. He set down before me and then he laid down and turned his bad red eyes up to me. And he never took 'em off. I would have paid no attention to him, but he annoyed me so. So at last I says to him, says I:

"'Gwan wid ye, for ye are well known to be no more than a fool,' says I, 'so the mistress tells me'

"He blinked one eye and then the other, but beyond that he did not stir. He made me that uneasy a-blinkin' his eyes at me that I thought to quiet me feelings with a cup of tay and a bite to eat, which it was myself, ma'am, told me to take when it pleased me. I got up to go to the kitchen and the dog he got up, too.

"'Lie down, ye brute!' says I to him. 'But the divil a bit he lay down, but he wagged his tail and looked at me with the same insulting smile that he was sitting on his countenance now. I went on to the kitchen and he went on behind me. I stopped and he stopped, and though I be a Christian woman, I lost me patience then.

"'To the divil with ye!' says I, and the dog he wagged his tail.

"And I went to the pantry and laid my hand on the door of the ice box. The beast was standing in front of me, looking me in the eye.

"'What business of yours is it?' says I, 'if I choose to be taking a bite, as the mistress has said I had the right to?' But the beast he only come a step nigher to me. 'I turned the latch of the ice box door. 'What does he do but have the owldness to growl at me like I was a thief. I am an honest woman and a lady, and I hold meself too high to mix up in a dog fight. So I left the ice box and went to the tay chest, for, says I to meself, if I cannot eat, there's no son of a gun of a dog shall keep me from a cup of tay.

"No sooner had I laid my hand on the cover of the tay chest than the dog stands up on the floor and puts his feet on the shelf beside me. The ugly face of him was forinast me ear and I could feel his hot breath.

"'What will ye now?' says I.

"And, desperate like, I unhooked the cover of the tay chest, and he growled again.

"With that I was not only mad but grieved, for it seemed like he was a watch over me, and I turned me back on the brute and come on to the parlor. I was weary and faint and sick at heart. Says I to meself, I will lie on the lounge and take a bit of a nap. And it may be that the beast will be asleep when I wake and will not trouble me. So I fixed the pillows on the lounge. And as I was about to lay meself down up came the despicable dog. First he put one big black foot upon the lounge and then another, and then his whole self, looking me in the eye, cautious like, the while. And he stretched himself out on his lazy side. And the contemptible creature laid his black head on the very pillow I had laid out for meself.

"'Git up,' says I. But the beast wagged his tail and never moved.

"'Git up,' says I. But he only kept on wagging his tail. He closed one of his eyes and regarded me most insulting with the other. I am a patient woman and not one to lose my temper or set unladylilyke, but I could stand no more. I went and got me umbrella and I poked the beast with it. I stood off as far as I could for fear I should be attacked by the brute. He took no notice except to swing his tail a little more free each time as I gave him a poke. With that I turned the handle around and give him a smash with it in the ribs. Then he stopped wagging his tail and growled at me once more, most intimidating. What could I do the rest of the night but sit on a chair and look at the red and blinking eye of the unclean beast. For so soon as I rose up he rose likewise. So soon as I sat down so did he, laying out his head on the pillow as I told you. Likewise he blinked. And the minute I closed my eyes to rest them from the light he growled like he feared I would sleep despite all his interference.

"So have I been sitting on me chair a-cursing of the dog through the night and him a-sleeping in comfort saving when I stirred or closed me eyes, and then he was most villainous awake. And as I sat there lookin' at the baste, at first I thought it was his nature to be so. But then the more I thought the more it was a wonder to me that you, Mis' Perkins, who I had always thought to be such a lady, would be kapin' a animal so vile. And the more I considered your keeping the baste the more I come to regard it as intended to be an insult to meself. And I have now concluded that I was left in the house with the dog with the purpose that the creature should insult me, as he did, most faithful. And so it stands. I want no more of ye and yours. Never will I come into the house again, not if the two of ye go down on your knees to ask it. So help me.

"'Good mornin'."

Novel Alps Crossing.

An attempt to cross the Alps in a balloon, starting from the Italian side, will be made next summer. The intention is to keep at a height of 15,000 feet as long as possible, and to take photographic views and make scientific observations during the passage.
