FRIDAY, AUGUST 26.

You will see that ex-Editor Paddock of Libertyville, is out as an independent candidate for superintendent of schools. Mr. Paddock has had large experience as a teacher, is up-to-date in these matters and a hustler of the first class. He will add life and zest to the campaign whether he wins or not.

When we lived in Adams, Mass., we learned of a woman who married her second husband before her first husband's funeral. Her first partner was drowned in the filling up of the Central shaft, 1000 feet deep into the solid rock, with water, and it was over a year before it was pumped out, Mike's body recovered and the funeral held.

Ex-Editor B. A. Dunn of Waukegan is writing a book for boys, a story of the war five and thirty years ago. General McClurg will publish it early in October. That reminds us we ought to write a book about Vermont, the mother of statesmen, divines, editors, etc. etc. The only drawback is, we can't spare the money just now to hire folks to read it.

A. W. Fletcher for sheriff is now far and away in the lead, and for this reason the people of the county want the best man for the place, and they know our Deerfield candidate has the prime qualifications for that office. So far his campaign has run itself chiefly: the more the people know the man, the better they like him, and hence they want his service in the county shrievalty and we expect he will "get there."

E. B. Phillips of Waukegan has been out all over the county of late and says the crop of candidates for office is big, very big in some respects. Every cross road and four corners of Lake County has a candidate for sheriff: and the candidates for superintendent of schools are nearly as numerous. One thing makes Supt. Marvin so popular is the fact that he has a big hole in his body made by a rebel bullet and the old "98th" boys never forget such a man.

While I was a student in Fairfax, Vermont, at the old New Hampton Institution 1853-1861, I was told a man once went to "Elder" Dunn, and told him he wished to unite with the church. He said when Deacon Shepardson, or some other deacon repaired his cellar, he was working for him and took occasion to examine the good deacon's pork barrels and found them well filled while he had none at home and so he resolved to help himself to a little from the deacon's barrels that night. When he was poking about in the dark after the pork the dog which slept in the shed, heard him and barked and he hurried away minus the pork, as he was running for dear life, as he thought the big dog was at his heels, this scripture came to his mind, "The dog shall catch the thief at night," and therefore he wanted to unite with the church. Elder Dunn suggested "further consideration."

"BUILT IN" FOLKS.

Dr. Holmes says, in the "Autocrat," we think, that some folks when they call on you have such hard work in getting away from your home that they seemed to be "built-in" as part of the house, and so he styled them built in folks. They are people who call on you and plant themselves in a chair and sit there and talk, and talk, and talk on, as though they would never stop, and don't say much either: the everlasting talkers never do say much,—especially that you, or anyone else cares to hear. They are not conversationalists: theirs is only "a gift of gab" that is as endless as a belt in a machine shop.

They bore you beyond all account with their ceaseless, meaningless, useless chatter of the tongue. You heave a sigh when you see one of them coming, because their ceaseless boring is as bad or worse than a like length of time in a dentist's chair, with his foot on the pedal of his "merry-go-round," while the drill is in one of your molars.

But the bore babbler is not the worse phase of it; all things have an end, except his chatter. He calls on you just because he is restless and having almost no resources in himself, goes out to bore some one, and his time being of no special value, he seems to think all other people put a like light estimate on the value of theirs; so he not only bores you with his meaningless talk, but he don't know when to stop. The idea of doing his errand, if he really has one, and right off again so as not to disturb you, never occurs to him. Or he will get up and start and get to the door, and then with his hand on the knob stand and talk fifteen to thirty minutes more, and not only rob you of your time, but weary you by standing to hear say nothings. They can't get away, they seem a part of the house, the same as the door, or the casings: they are "built-ins," and perpetual pests. They not unfrequently tell you they "did not mean to stay so long," etc. The fact is, they had no meaning about it any way. The problem is how to get rid of them: as to being reformed, they are hopeless. These "built-ins" are the bane of a busy man's life. Just as we get down to a book of an evening, one of them comes in—and oh, the "built-ins."

DEGRADATION OF THE FLAG.

For a number of years attempts have been made by patriotic citizens to have a law passed by congress to forbid and punish the desecration of the American flag. Bills to this end have been introduced in congress from time to time, only to slumber peacefully in some committee-room until the end of the term. There is one pending now, but the likelihood of its passage at the short session, when so many measures of vast importance are pending, is, to say the least, remote, unless some special effort is made.

What the measure has lacked heretofore is a concerted and weighty pressure upon congress in its behalf. This the Daughters of the American Revolution have undertaken to supply, and it is to be hoped that at their annual session in Washington next February, these patriotic dames and damsels, the descendants of the men who made the flag, who gloried in it and achieved independence under it, will be able to stimulate neglectful congressmen into passing the bill.

No better time can be chosen than the present for this agitation, when the war with Spain has been brought to a close and our flag has been carried so triumphantly in distant seas and foreign lands. It has won new renown among the nations, and is an emblem of power that the whole world respects.

That this splendid insignia of the national glory should be made the means of advertising whisky and beer, soap and candles, handkerchiefs, shirts, collars and socks, not to speak of yellow journals, is a desecration if not a crime.

Such abuses must be stopped, and The Times-Herald wishes the Daughters good speed in their work.—The Times-Herald.

A PLEASANT DAY.

If you want to know just what it is, by a delightful personal experience to be most courteously and cordially treated, go on a tour of inspection and interviewing down to the University of Chicago, and get yourself assigned to Prof. Arnolt as chaperone and guide, and you will see most of the wonders of that famous institution. He will show you some rare things in that Haskell museum; half a dozen genuine Egyptian mummies, standing up like wall pictures. Think of those Egyptian maidens of three to five thousand years ago standing there against the wall and staring into the face of an inquisitive yankee. Then go up into the library and see some of those Greek and Hebrew classics, a Greek Testament, on vellum, centuries old, carefully kept in a big kodak box; and Assyrian slabs and casts by the score, and yet the institution is not ten years old. After an hour or two of sight seeing, and "buzzing" with questions, you won't feel very reluctant to accept his generous proposal to go over to the "Quadrangle Club" and lunch.

This club is a University institution, owned and operated by the bachelor professors, and others, with a choice selection of non-University bachelors. The club house is just across Lexington avenue from the campus, and while the bill of fare is more modest than that of the Chicago or Union League clubs, it is choice and abundant, and admirably served.

The building is new, modern, up-to-date, and the dining room is spacious, well lighted and furnished. There was all the quiet, order and neatness one could desire, and yet you can see every one. In its reading room we found all the leading magazines of this country and Europe, we did not look to see if the chief Asiatics were there, but there seemed to be everything of current literature the most bookish of book-worms could desire. When we found ourself tired out and thought the professor might relish a bit of rest, we bade him good by and meandered to the nearest street car, homeward bound after one of the most charming and profitable days of the season, including a ten minutes interview with President Harper.
