

PASTOR VINES' DEPARTURE.

Rev. William M. Vines closed his pastorate of about one year Sunday, Nov. 13th, having accepted a call to the First Baptist Church in Asheville, N. C., and entered upon his duties in his southern home last Sunday. Mr. Vines was a student in the theological school of the University of Chicago during his stay here, pursuing special studies, and so could give this church only a portion of his time. Having had two pastorates before coming here, he not only had a "barrel full" on hand, of which he did not make any very great apparent use, he had experience both as a sermonizer and as a pastor, and these were important factors.

He represented the best type of southern preachers, laying special emphasis on Christian experience and spiritual lines generally; a style of preaching needed and particularly adapted to the place and church. Unfortunately the church was somewhat divided, and hence he emphasized, in his pulpit ministrations those phases of the truth and work on which all could agree and unite, and so was beloved by all. It was a difficult place for him or any young man, but he kept clear of both Scyllar and Charibolis, in his work. His sermons were full of the marrow and spirit of the gospel, and fed the souls of his people, and that larger visible results were not secured was no fault of his.

He did a good, yea, an excellent work, for an excellent spirit was in him. We have seldom known a pastor more uniformly loved by his people, and one who showed more heavenly wisdom both in and out of the pulpit than he. The church passed the usual resolutions on his departure, but they are not half as valuable or significant as the love of the people, young and old, which will follow him to his new field.
