Miss Nettie Hall, fourth grade teacher in the West school, goes home next week to visit and rest before beginning the work of the new school year. Miss Hall has been occupied thus far during the vacation with private pupils.

Great excitement prevails in the southern environment of the town over a proposed cemetery to be located in a portion of the old Helm estate situated just south and west of Helm's crossing. Naturally the people who have homes in that locality object strenuously and have set about to hinder the objectionable transaction

The women Foresters will treat their husbands and children to a day in the woods to-morrow. They will assemble in "Duffy's orchard," south of town, and spend the day. Each lady will be armed with a good-sized lunch basket, and each gentleman is supposed to contribute to the general conviviality by relating at least one good story.

Highwood.

Highwood-Past and Present.

In the shadowy depths of the forest,
That bordered Lake Michigan's shore,
There was founded a prosperous village,
In the happier days of yore.

'Twas a quiet unpretentious hamlet,
And the pioneer called it Highwood,
To honor the tall sylvan monarchs,
Which then in their full grandeur stood.

'Twas a place rich in natural beauty,
And its future seemed bright to us all,
But somehow a shadow fell o'er it,
A dismal and ominous pall.

And the town soon fell into decay,

The young, who could find no employment,
From their fond loving haunts stole away.

But returning to-day to his birth-place, Comes one who has traveled afar. In the vain search of fame and of fortune, Lured on by ambition's bright star.

He steps from the train at the depot,
In bewilderment gazes around,
Where panic and ruin once lingered.
Improvement is everywhere found.

New buildings have sprung up as by magic, The town is alive with a throng, And where he once herded his cattle, The trolley cars rumble along.

In wonder he gazed on the aspect,
So changed since the days of his youth,
Surely this is not sleepy old Highwood!
Can it be? Is it really the truth?

Then accosting a stalwart policeman,
"what has brought you such prosperity?"
"Tis the work of our honored Mayor Hogan
And the Frost who is known as A. C."

"The beautiful park called Fort Sheridan, With its vaudeville, music and dance, And all that money can purchase, The natural charms to enhance—"

"The power-house and the street railway, Which always employ a large force, Bringing joy to the heart of the toiler, Are traceable to the same source."

"They have brought us employment and pleasure,

The things which the poor need the most, Then hurrah for the Mayor of our village, And hurrah for the warm-hearted Frost!"

"Long life to your Mayor?" quoth the traveler,

"And the man who has such a cold name,
They shall live in the hearts of your people,
And the future will add to their fame."

"They have banished the shadow from Highwood.

It will slumber again, nevermore.

'Tis the fairest of all the bluff cities,

And the beacon-light of the north shore,"
