THE MACABEES FETE.

This weather, when you can broil a chop or steak by putting them out in the sun, is just the time for lawn parties. The cool evening air, the slight breezes, lawn gowns and golf suits make people love the lawns. The Macabees being a wise set of women planned their fete at this juncture, hence the large assemblage on the C. N. Aldridge lawns Thursday evening. Chinese lanterns were not a necessity, but they came in nicely for an hour or two, till the moon came up. Then too, ice cream is always dangerous as a beverage, unless it is good, but the Macabees serve only good viands, hence their cream and cake, lemonade etc., had a ready sale.

The Macabees, being of royal blood, don't like money, it is filthy lucre, fit only for men of commercial mercurial tastes to handle. But sometimes it is a connecting link between ice cream and success, and so is as a necessary evil, as De Loqueville says, and the good women "accepted" a generous pile of shekels.

The social features of the occasion were charming. Some people talked all the time, very few listened much. They had no opportunity, and as the moon rose to the zenith, the crowd gently dispersed and went safely home—no one is ever "held up" in this town on his way home from a fete.
