The old Corey house, now Mr. Campbell's property, has surrendered to the spirit of progressiveness and improvement that has for some time past been transforming the appearance of the Port Clinton of old to a beauty worthy of that thoroughfare's new position as a portion of Sheridan boulevard.

The Highland Park Gun Clubs' meeting of Thursday evening did not develop a quorum so that the question as to whether the club membership limit should be increased from twenty-five to thirty is still, like our weather, unsettled. The club house of the organization is located at Koskonong lake, Wis, and the coming spring and fall shooting seasons are looked forward to with those anticipations of good sport that only a hunter feels. For Koskonong lake with its unrivalled reputation as the feeding place for that rarest of all ducks, the canvas back, is indeed a hunter's paradise. If the Park gun club raises its membership limit

Mr. Pfanstiehl's Sunday school class of "jolly owls" had an all-round good time last night at the home of Capt. O. H. Morgan. The evening was partly taken up with a business meeting. The interest the members of the class show in the welfare of their organization is as marked as ever. Already this flock of owls are trimming feathers for their summer's flight. Last summer they found a roosting place on the shores of a beautiful Wisconsin lake, but whether or no Greenlake will hear their hootings again this year these wise young owls refuse to say. The father bird of the flock—he that deals out long-winded sermons from his perch of a Sabbath—last Sunday preached, as only a sedate old owl can preach, on "Self Culture," and the other jolly owls have been busy ever since maturing plans for getting this sermon printed in pamphlet form. the idea being to sell enough copies at 10 cents a piece to lay by something for their coming summer's outing. Truly, of the birds we have with us in winter, the owl is the wisest of them all. Further as to last night's gathering in next week's NEWS-LETTER.

The complete time-card of the Electric Railway, showing close connections with all C. M. & St. P. trains at Evanston, is convenient for the public and increasing the travel on the road. Points on the west and south sides of Chicago, heretofore difficult of access, are now conveniently reached, and "through traffic" is growing.
