

The Prohibitionists.

We observe with pleasure that the prohibitionists go on making nominations for national and state offices with great spirit and determination. They do not seem to mind the jeers or indifference of the public. The fact that the vote for Mr. Levering in 1896 was only 120,000—less than one per cent of the total vote, does not dishearten them.

After all, why should it? If their cause is just, as they believe, they ought to stick to it so long as one person remains to listen to their platform. And, after all, who can deny the truth of their invectives against the rum power? Can any one say truly that he believes a protective tariff, a bad money system, or a foolish foreign policy is as dangerous to the welfare of the nation as the ever-growing drink habit that makes men slaves in a double sense—slaves to their appetite and slaves to the cool and strong minds that abjure alcohol. They may be wrong in the methods they propose to repress the traffic. They are wrong, we believe. But if drunkenness is an injury to the race, they are right in principle, and we are glad to see them fighting their uphill battle with gayety and hopefulness.

We clip the above from a recent issue of the Chicago Journal. It is certainly very candid and fair almost to generosity; so unlike what the prohibition party generally gets from the old parties that we can not resist the temptation to congratulate ourselves that at least some of the papers are disposed to recognize the fact that the prohibition party is based upon a great and just principle; namely, uncompromising warfare against the legalized rum traffic. We suggest, however, one thing. The Journal says: "They (the prohibitionists) may be wrong in the methods they propose to repress the traffic. They are wrong, we believe, but if drunkenness is an injury to the race, they are right in principle." Why should not the Journal and other papers supporting the old parties suggest some other methods that are right and more likely to be successful in repressing the liquor system than the methods proposed by prohibitionists. So far as we know, and we have been anxiously watching the battle for half a century, the advocates and supporters of the old parties are ever destructionists and rarely ever constructionists. They are ready to tear down every effort made by the prohibitionists but never suggest anything to build up. The eternal cry is, "You can't do it that way." It is true, one of the parties persistently adds, "We are the temperance party," but that does not pass with any candid, thoughtful person.

The Humor of It.

There was a bit of humor about the Aldridge trial along with its other features. When City Attorney Knox read the state providing for a man's killing or destroying blue jays and other birds which were destroying the fruits in his garden, he seemed to see and feel the weakness of the prosecution and so he said—and it was all he could say—Mr. Aldridge didn't kill them the right way, or words of that import. He did not say how they should be killed, but we concluded he meant that Mr. Aldridge should have sprinkled salt on their tails and then wrung their necks, just as they kill chickens down in Vermont. We suggest that the city ordinance be modified by inserting these "salt on the tail" and neck wringing clauses, so that the rest of us will know how to keep out of the clutches of the law in killing blue jays robbing our gardens.

Some people seem to think that Judge Hibbard, who aided Mr. Aldridge, felt a bit proud over the success of his first appearance at the bar as counsel, but they are in error, for Mr. Aldridge conducted his own case with a small degree of acumen and forensic ability. All the police judge did was to impress on the highly plastic and receptive mind of Judge Hibbard the fact that an ordinance of the city of Highland Park could not override the statute of the State of Illinois, or in other words that a part of Aldridge won out in the trial all by himself, just as he shot the blue jays unaided, because law and right was on his side.

Waukegan, according to its brilliant Sun, is in a state of mind over its present city administration. Read its ringing words: "August, September, October, November, December, January, February, March, eight more months of Pearce and disaster and then let us humbly hope that all those politicians who thought spite greater than the interests of their city or their party will climb cheerfully aboard the good old wagon and 'clean the rascals out,' Waukegan needs a revolution, and sooner or later it got to come." Well, well, Brother Stearns, if "them's your sentiments," how could you let your Sun become the tool and ally of a similar set in this city? Now, you know how good it is.
