Objections to Prohibition.
But I-Know Liquor is Sold in Maine.—We don't dispute that point for a minute. There is strong prohibition law against stealing in Maine, but we presume that all the thieves are not out side of that state. "There are open saloons in Portland, Maine. Undoubtedly, but that is not the fault of the law nor the people of Maine, but of officers elected to enforce that law. Who are they? Republicans or Democrats, ever time! When the Prohibition party gets into power in Maine you can bet your last summer hat that not an open saloon will be found in the whole state. A Prohibition party sheriff has just been elected in Portland and the day after the election most of the joints closed up.

I BELIEVE IN HIGH LICENSES—That's all right. If you believe in license, high or low, you should stay in either of the two parties. But don't come around and tell us that high license temperance legislation; better for some one who does not know that Lincoln is dead, or that the war is over, to play that game of All the brewers and distillers of the country are enthusiastically in favor of high license, and they ought to know what is good for their business. To say that drunkenness is diminished by high license is a high old lie, without any sense to it.

I Believe in Local Option. That was the overwhelming sentiment down South "befo' de war. They believed that northern states had no right to interfere with the slave trade of the south. But the people of the north didn't think exactly that way and gave local option in the traffic of human beings a death blow right square between the eyes. The Mormons would like very much to see the polygamy on the local option plan. If you see a poisonous snake crawling through the grass in your front yard directly toward your little child. Prohibition says: "Kill the snake," but local option says: "Drive it over to your neighbor's yard." Local option is a "leedle" too local for dealing with the whisky traffic in this country.—Tallie Morgan, in the Patrol.

Prohibition in Maine.
The Inter Ocean again weighs over the fact that the law against liquor selling in Maine is being enforced. It is true that all this class of papers insist that it is being enforced, and that the more drinking in Maine than elsewhere, and yet they are inconsistent enough to complain of the fact when it is enforced.

Listen.
"A new scheme has been devised for extracting the few remaining teeth of the famous rat-ute known as the Maine prohibitory liquor law, and there is a fair prospect that it will succeed. The bill is to be introduced in the session of the legislature which will begin on next Wednesday providing that the enforcement of the liquor law be taken out of the hands of the sheriffs and placed exclusively in the hands of the city and town authorities.
"Portland and Lewiston, being prohibitory-ridden, are especially in favor of this change, as it is well known that no mayor or chief of police could be elected in either of those cities who was disposed to enforce the law. It would be practically local option, and it would at once and completely dispel the terror that possesses Portland over the recent election of the Baptist clergyman and prohibitionist, Rev. S. F. Pearson, as sheriff.

"Pearson was elected partly by accident, and partly as a joke, men of all parties voting for him, and none of them suspecting that he would win. But he did win, and now the Portlanders have to go dry or drink out of bottles in dark closets."

Difference of Opinion.
The following is the continuation of a criticism on an editorial published in The Outlook on "The Abolition of the Canteen." The editor goes on to say, "We do not think that all use or all sale of alcoholic beverages is wrong." We must beg leave to differ, but will not stop to discuss that point here. The editor adds: "That all use and all sale of alcohol is not wrong, is admitted by most prohibitionists, who allow its use to be legitimate for medicinal purposes. We do not believe that science justifies any such sharp line between beverage and medicine." We do not question the editor's right to believe whatever seems to him to be true and right, and we do not question his sincerity. And, furthermore, if we should accept his premises, namely, that alcoholic beverages are not wrong, per se, we might perhaps reach his conclusion. But that is just what we cannot possibly do. Physicians may prescribe strychnine, nux vomica, belladonna, and other poisons for medicinal purposes, but it surely does not follow that it is morally right for one in health to make common use of these deadly poisons. But to the best of our belief there is not a writer on "toxicology in the world who does not class alcohol, wherever found, as a poison, and poison sooner or later kills. The very word intoxicant comes from a Latin word toxicum, meaning poison. It is not, however, a matter of human opinion. The language of scripture is unmistakable. One can hardly read Proverbs, 23rd chapter, verses 29 to 35, or Habakkuk, second chapter, verse 15, and still be in doubt, especially if he makes a careful study of the original.

But the editor of The Outlook says: "All drunkenness is wrong, all drinking is not wrong;" by which it is evident he believes moderate drinking may be all right. Will the editor please tell us where and when the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage begins to be drunk? A prominent Good Templar some years ago was asked when sinner ceased to be "sweet" and became "hard." The reply was "tell me when a certain animal ceases to be a pig and becomes a hog, and I will answer your question."

But again the editor adds: "Whether drinking is wrong or not depends on the time, the place, the circumstances, the person." We do not like to appear disrespectful towards so able a man as the editor of The Outlook, and especially so, as his article is in many respects eminently fair and candid, but we must say that to us this last assertion is nonsense. There is a principle involved in the whole matter, or there isn't. If there isn't then Paul's teaching concerning our tempting others is nonsense, and would better be expunged from the scriptures.

Judging from their conversation, an idea must feel very lonely in some people's head.

Knew a

where part of the merchants undertook to increase their trade and get all the business they possibly could away from the other merchants by giving trading stamps. Of course the customers paid for the stamps in the long run, as more had to be paid for the goods, and the premium was paid for by the customers. We have always been glad Highland Park has been spared from such an affliction.

We advertise with our home paper and keep the money at home, rather than give it to transient tramp schemes. If you want your book filled quick (we mean your pocketbook), and want to use economy in the collection of stamps (the kind the government gives) trade with the lowest price grocery house in this county.
