The people evidently believe in their electric light plant and propose to stick to it. The Winnetka Local News will have to find something else as a victim of its alleged jokes; if it expects the people to buy and read and laugh.

The editor of the Winnetka Local News has recently been telling the people how the political situation looked to a "man up a tree." He can probably give a thrilling account now of how it looks to a man at the sharp end of a harpoon.

We would like to have Mrs. Nation visit Winnetka, although we have no saloons and are not even troubled with "blind pigs," still a hatchet brigade might spend a very profitable half hour demolishing the unsightly sign boards which surround our otherwise attractive railway station. On alighting from a train one's view, instead of falling on a park or even on a row of well-stored stores, is greeted by a host of signs of all sizes and colors, advertising almost anything from town to village which the prospective tourist obtains is not one which will make him wish to have his home here. It will take several hours of driving on our excellent streets and walking through our ravines to make him forget the nightmare which he experienced at his arrival.
