RANCH NAMED FOR M'KINLEY.

The Purchase of Which Hinged Upon the President's First Election -Grows Grape Fruit.

A good many children of the male persuasion have been named after President McKinley, but it has remained for a California woman to fasten the presidential cognomen upon a tract of land, says the Chicago Record-Herald. The first gentleman of the republic feasted a brief season ago upon some of the most luscious fruit it had ever been his privilege to sample. Grape fruit it was; large, juicy, grateful and comforting. The label on the basket showed it to be from "The McKinley tract, Redlands, Cal." After eating of the fruit the president had to suggest the story, and here it is: Mrs. David Morey, a woman who was the pioneer in the growing of oranges in carrying it into execution. Going to the Redlands section, feasted her eyes | the railroad | ficials, he suggested that several years ago upon a nine-acre a special carriage be set aside for tract of land adjoining some of her church services, and so eloquently did property. She wanted to buy, but the he argue in avor of the project that owner said her nay. He wanted the he soon car led his point, with the retract himself.

CHURCH IN A RAILWAY CAR.

An Arrangement by Which Religious Devotees in Russia Can Excuse Travel on the Sabbath,

The Russians are naturally a devout people and even when taking a long journey almost always contrive to spend the Sabbath in some place where they can attend church, says a London exchange. The first travelers on the trans-Siberian railway, however, soon found that this could not easily be done, and many of them were sorely grieved at the thought that if they wanted to travel in this way they would have to give up some of their customary devotions. A happy idea then occurred to one of them and he at once set about
