WHO?
Do we always practice what we preach? We clip the following from the Barrington Review:
"Some merchants are continually growing about people living in Chicago, and yet when a female agent struck town with a lot of calendars the same merchants ready buyers. We received prices for her calendars that we should employ a lovely young lady to go around for us that they would bite at anything and we could rob them the same way."

That's just it! We have merchants here in Highland Park doing the same thing. The manager of this paper has resided in this place a little over a year and during that time has spent every dollar of his earnings among home merchants. Now, can the merchants themselves say the same thing? Suppose this paper was to advocate buying all the goods possible in Chicago. How do you think Mr. Merchant would feel toward us, every day we run across printed work done in Chicago for these same merchants; we suppose they will say: "The NEWS-LETTER office doesn't turn out work good enough for us or their prices are too high." All right, we might say the same thing in buying our needs. This office does $5 worth of Chicago work to every $1 done for the Park. The manager or some of the employes are in Chicago every day, and yet spend their money at home. The NEWS-LETTER has always refused advertisements from out-of-town firms where their ads would compete with home merchants.

Those who can't show a home imprint on their printing should not "holler" because residents of the Park buy their goods in Chicago. They are only following the merchants' example. Why, even the school board of this township are sending their printing to Chicago. We hope that this can be remedied at the next school election. The NEWS-LETTER will take particular pains that the date of the next school election is not overlooked by the people of this and the west township.

ON THE FENCE.
Editing a paper is a nice thing. If we publish jokes people will say we are rattle brained; if we don't, we are an old fossil. If we publish original matter, they say we do not give enough selections; if we give selections they say we are too lazy to write. If we don't go to church we are heathen, if we do, we are a hypocrite. If we remain in the office, we ought to get out and hustle for locals; if we go out we are not attending to our business. If we wear old clothes they laugh at us, if we wear good clothes they say we have a pull.

GREAT BEAUTIES.
Many Handsome Faces Are Found Among the Women of Cashmere, India.
Many of the women of India, and especially those of Cashmere, are beautiful. In a typical Hindu beauty the skin is just dark enough to give a rich, soft appearance to the complexion, says a London journal. The features are regular, the eyes mild and black and shaded by long silken lashes, the hands and feet are small and well formed, the demeanor is modest, the manner is gentle, the voice low and sweet. There are fine-looking women among the middle class Hindus, as well as among the upper ten, and even among the lower class the faces are often very pleasing. Many a Hindu woman who has, perhaps, little pretensions to beauty of face, has, nevertheless, the step and carriage of a princess, and if one is not too fastidious about perfection of eyes and mouth and nose her figure as she walks down the street with her load on her head is truly a beautiful sight.

File of Alligator's Teeth.
A remarkable operation was performed by a dozen keepers on a 13-foot alligator which is kept in the Bronx zoo at New York. The alligator, which is a powerful animal, showed signs of fierceness for some time. He wound up one morning by killing an eight-foot companion in the same tank. Then it was decided that the big one's teeth should be cut. A rope with a sling was lowered over his head and drawn taut; the tail was similarly treated. Each one of the legs was next secured in a like manner. By patience and repeated trials a lasso was got into the ponderous jaw. The alligator gave a bite and the rope parted like thread. Then a wire rope was secured. This was finally got into place.
Sticks were pried between the jaws to keep them from clashing together. Thus held, the reptile lay helpless and the work of sawing off some of the longest and most dangerous teeth was soon accomplished.

President McKinley's declination to cross the Mexican border while at El Paso is said to have reminded Representative Hitt of an incident of one of Gen. Grant's tours. During his first term as president Gen. Grant paid a visit to Niagara Falls. He was eager to cross over to the Canadian side, and it was with some difficulty that his friends restrained him, urging that there was an unwritten law that the president of the United States should not leave the country during his term of office. "Well," said Gen. Grant, pulling at his cigar, "that seems a very silly law to me. I would like to cross over so that Colfax may realize his ambition to be president, if it is for only five minutes."

According to a Washington report the telephone slot machines are doing an enormous work in the matter of taking worn-out dimes out of circulation. There is nothing to prevent worn-out, mutilated and almost smooth dimes from being put into the slots, and as a result many persons keep the worn-out dimes for that particular purpose. Many druggists and others who keep public telephones make no objection to taking mutilated dimes any more for the reason that they keep a supply on hand to do a telephone business with. When they see that a telephone user is going to put a new dime in the slot they simply take it in and hand a worn-out dime in exchange.

A steamer steward defiled the Chicago river by throwing into it a dishpan full of potato parings and soap suds and was arrested. They are getting very particular about that formerly abominably filthy stream. People no longer have to hold their noses in crossing it, says a report from the breezy city.

KEEP QUIET.
Arthur, who is forbidden to speak at the table, had his revenge the other day. As dinner began he was uneasy, and finally said: "Ma, can't I speak just one word?"
"You know the rule, Arthur."
"Not one word?"
"No, Arthur, not until your father finishes his paper."
Arthur subsided until the paper was finished, when he was asked what he had to say.
"Oh, nothing, only Nora put the custards outside the window to cool, and the cat has been eating them up!"
