BOOKS SPREAD CONTAGION.

The Chicago public library board last winter put a special committee to work on the subject of infected books. The eminent scientist, Dr. W. A. Kuflewski, was chairman of the committee which examined fifty volumes taken from the library. When the committee reported, the doctor displayed several small glass tubes containing countless germs of disease taken from the books, not one of the fifty being free from them. He was convinced that books spread contagion. Now a person who takes a book out of the library in town, city or village, always does so of his own free will; but when parents and school boards put second-hand books in the hands of the young pupil, they are practically master of the situation, and if diphtheria or other dangerous disease attacks those children, their parents become responsible. An adult need not go to a public library; he can help our children to go to school. We have no right to endanger their lives by making them use second-hand books. But is disease communicated by second-hand school books? Here are two facts to be looked at, separately and jointly. From some cause or other, second-hand school books have found their way into nearly every neighborhood and school in Kentucky; they have small-pox and other contagious diseases. Scarcely a county in the state escaped the ravages of contagion, and in most instances the manner of its approach is mysteriously unknown. Dr. J. N. McCormick, of Bowling Green, secretary of the state board of health, who has treated many cases of small-pox in the last three years, says: "It is easy to see how the use of second-hand books might become a source of contagion in our schools, especially where let fever and diphtheria. The practice with some of our sellers of dealing in second-hand books is very objectionable. Public spirited medical men in Cincinnati declare that the use of indiscriminately using second-hand books would be a real menace to the public health. In evidence they cite innumerable instances where contagion has spread from books exposed to inspection. One of the best natural cultures for disease germs known, and one of sterilization will clean them. This fact has been recognized by health department experts for a long time. Where books have been exposed even to the atmosphere of rooms in which contagion is present they have been promptly ordered destroyed. It is not possible to tell what second-hand book bought of a dealer has passed through. The germ that once prevailed among neighbors known to each other, which school books were introduced, is far safer than buying from second hand dealers; still most munities have long since abandoned the former practice. It is a safe rule to buy and use your own school books; then you know what you have. You can keep them out of the sick-room, away from every source of contagion.

Disinfection is, indeed, practiced by the dealers; and it is their only justification, in the eyes of all who conscientiously adhere to and practice the precautions inculcated by the germ of disease, which, we remark with emphasis, is no longer a debatable, but a well-established law. But although disinfecting is a great benefit, it does not often disinfect. The outside of books, for instance may be thoroughly disinfected, and yet the germ within—between the leaves—remains unharmed unless the leaves, one by one, be subjected to the most careful fumigation. This process would necessarily be so slow, and therefore expensive, that it would be cheaper to buy a new book than to sterilize an old one. —Indianapolis Sentinel.

SILJESTROM'S ICE HOUSE.

Frank Siljestrom, one of our enterprising ice men, has built him a new ice house up on Elm place and First street, opposite the freight yards of the Northwestern railway, so that it is only a few rods from the loaded ice cars as they come in from the Wisconsin lakes, to his ice house. The foundations are solid concrete. The whole being drained to prevent unnecessary waste, at the bottom. The building is sixty-six feet long, thirty-five feet wide and from the ground to the top of the plates is twenty-five feet. It is divided into four rooms of sixteen by thirty-five each, and twenty-five high, giving it about 14,000 cubic feet. Mr. Siljestrom has filled one section with ice from the old Evans brick yard, for cooling purposes in meat markets, etc. The balance with choice Wisconsin ice for his large family trade, which he supplies with only pure ice. The total capacity of his new house must be about 1,200 tons, taking ice at about fifty-eight pounds per cubic foot.

THE NEW PLAN.

We understand the "wield and siren" like fire alarm has been changed and now the problem is how the department and the public generally are to know when there is a fire. Later, we understand the officials will divide the city up into sections or "beats" and hire a little boy to cover each beat when there is a fire, with a dinner bell in his hand to ring vigorously over his beat, crying at the top of his voice, "fire, fire, Bill Jones' stone pile is on fire, fire, fire," and then the firemen will turn out and extinguish the fire if Bill Jones' stone pile is not consumed before they can get there on this modern arrangement. We may be all wrong, and certainly don't want to hurt the feelings of any one, but that strikes us as a pretty big fuss over a very small matter.

Let us speak of man as we find him, and censure only what we can see. Remembering that no one can be perfect unless he takes Rocky Mountain Tea. G. B. Cummings. Cg-14

LOOKING AHEAD.

Dale Sweetland's show window of this week, presents a very unique appearance, in the way of a miniature part of our city, showing Central avenue and cross streets, macadamized with the real crushed rock and gravel, and located thereon the new fire department house. The originator has designed a two story frame residence to be on fire and the fire laddies, with engines, hook and ladder wagons, responding to a 4-11 call.
