We will speak out, we will be heard, Though all earth's temples crack. We will not bate a single breath. Nor take a single sentence back.

well-ordered, immaculate arrangements, to appreciate that the perfect harmony of the domestic machinery is due to that splendid spirit of method that everywhere prevails. It would tempt the palate of a Brillat Savarin to watch a dinner in the course of preparation.

All are familiar with the picturesque natural surroundings of the Moraine; its long stretch of sandy beach that affords the children so much pleasure, its fine bathing beach, its picturesque bluffs and ravines,—in fact "age cannot wither, nor time make stale the infinite variety of charm."

Perfect, even luxurious, in all its appointments, nothing has been overlooked that will tend to the comfort and the pleasure of its guests. Scarcely a day or evening goes by that does not offer some interesting diversion, pleasantly planned by the management for its guests. The beautiful new ballroom is the scene of a brilliant dance every Tuesday and Saturday evening; there are lectures and recitals, regattas, ping-pong and tennis tournaments, card parties and coaching parties.

While there is every evidence of life and enjoyment, one is never confronted at the Moraine by the babel of noise and confusion that so usually prevails at popular summer resorts, in all of dignity and quiet elegance mark the place. That it enjoys a wide reputation is evidenced in the hotel register where names of guests from all parts of the world appear.

Quite a popular feature this summer has been the coaching parties brought out from the city by the "Old Times" coach, and the charming little dinners enjoyed by a few choice spirits in the Amsterdam, or Norfolk private dining rooms. The children's room is old colonial and most attractive. The smoking room is old Flemish. On warm evenings the guests are always served continental fashion, with coffee, on the broad verandas, which have been provided with quaint hickory chairs and tables.

The Moraine has solved the oft propounded problem, by providing a hotel at once remote from all the hurly burly of big commercial centers and yet so accessible to the same as to make it possible for men of affairs with large business interests which cannot always be neglected for a prolonged period, to attend daily to their affairs and still enjoy a pleasant, healthful summer outing with their families away from the city's heat and turmoil.
